

S.B. Jobs: More Persons Seek Fewer Opportunities

By BRENDA WALKER
Nexus Staff Writer

The unemployment rate in Santa Barbara County has risen from 5.5 to 7.7 percent because of a decrease in job availability, which has affected community members and students alike.

According to Mal Cobb of the State Employment Development Department, Santa Barbara's civilian labor force comprises 156,000 workers, of which 144,100 are employed, leaving 11,900 who are out of work. He said Santa Barbara County's unemployment rate has typically been below other county levels, such as Ventura's, whose unemployment rate has just dropped from 13 to 12 percent this month.

Cobb said it is the nature of the economy which has allowed this area to keep a lower average than other counties. He said Santa Barbara's economy is diversified, with a large number of small employers who serve to insulate the decline in jobs.

"We do not have big industries that we rely on, but what we do have are electronics and research companies that have sizable defense contracts," Cobb said.

In addition, he said the county government employs many people, as does the university and Vandenberg Air Force Base.

He also explained that we have a busy agricultural industry in the county that is an asset to the job market.

Because of the high cost of living in this area, many people who are unable to find work leave this county and are then dropped off as a statistic, thereby reducing the county labor force, Cobb said.

John Locke, manager of Perry's Pizza in Isla Vista, said he hires students because they are the primary work force in this area, but he added that Perry's hires non-students as well. He said most full-time positions are filled by people not in school because those are the people who usually respond to ads when they are hiring.

Locke explained that students occupy most of Perry's part-time

It is probably one of the hardest years for students to find jobs and it might turn out to be the most difficult financially.

The number of people who make up the civilian labor force is derived through surveying those in the county that are looking for jobs, and compiling that number with those from the unemployment office. Cobb thinks that the October unemployment rate will probably rise, but he does not foresee a sharp increase in the future.

Kate Silsbury of UCSB's Placement Department said the opportunity for part-time student employment has declined but it has been a general decline that can't be traced to any specific area. She said there is always an increase in employment for the Christmas season, followed by a decline in January.

Five thousand students have registered for the Placement Center's services and have found jobs," Silsbury said. She added that 8 percent of the student jobs the center receives are short term, such as housework, yard work, moving and hauling, restaurant and secretarial jobs.

positions, and Perry's has been consistent in the number of employees it hires.

Locke said he likes to hire students because they live close by which makes it convenient for them to get to work, and because students are usually dependable and fun to work with.

Ben Roberts of Harry Gorrilla's Cafe said he doesn't hire a person because s/he is a student or not, he just hires 15 people regardless of their status.

According to Silsbury, the rising cost of living and education has forced more students to take part-time jobs this year than in previous years, while at the same time there has been a decrease in job opportunities. Considering that the increase in enrollment has this year brought a larger number of people who work to the Santa Barbara area, it is probably one of the hardest years for students to find jobs and it might turn out to be the most difficult financially, she concluded.

17 UCSB Assistant Professors Granted Departmental Tenure

By SANDRA SHEWEY
Nexus Staff Writer

Seventeen assistant professors have joined the ranks of tenured faculty at UCSB this year, gaining job security and a measure of academic freedom.

The professors, who now bear the title of associate professor, were granted academic tenure following reviews by their departments, the Academic Senate Committee on Academic Personnel, external reviewing agencies and Chancellor Robert Huttenback.

Since tenure is the promise of a position until retirement, a candidate is thoroughly reviewed before tenure is granted.

"A young assistant professor comes up for tenure review between the ages of 30 and 40," David Sprecher, dean of the College of Letters and Sciences, explained. "He or she is tenured and can expect to be with the university for 30-35 years. In the tenure review, the university tries to determine what it can expect from the candidate in terms of productivity and growth."

Tenure has no divisions or levels of distinction. One tenured professor has the same employment security as another.

"Tenure protects against arbitrary dismissal, although it does not protect against termination by a budgetary decision," Sprecher stated.

"Tenure is intended to provide faculty members with an environment of academic freedom in which they can conduct research in controversial or unpopular areas without fear of dismissal," Associate Chancellor Charlotte Stough said.

Lecturers, a term which encompasses positions from teaching assistants to visiting dignitaries, are untenured. Assistant professors work toward the tenured positions of associate professor and professor.

Assistant professors holding a doctorate, but lacking teaching experience and published research are on an eight year limit established for all faculty members without tenure.

According to Sprecher, "Decisions are made as early as possible. Assistant professors are given a formal appraisal in the fourth year of service, and are notified whether tenure is likely or unlikely. It's a constructive review. If there are concerns, the (assistant) professor has time to take corrective action, relocate, or appeal." He added that some decisions aren't made until the sixth or seventh year of service because of appeals, but the candidates are notified one or two years before the termination of their eighth year.

Candidates for tenure are reviewed at the departmental, faculty, and administrative levels. Each review board considers criteria in four areas.

Teaching and research are given the most weight in the tenure decision, but professional competence and university and public service are considered in borderline cases.

"No one in the University of California will be tenured without a strong research and teaching record. It's fair to say that these two factors outweigh the others," Sprecher said.

According to Dean Mann, chair of the Committee on Academic Personnel, "A candidate's scholarly publication record is the principal criterion, in keeping with the University of California's mission to undertake scholarly research."

Research performance is critiqued by scrutiny of the quantity and quality of the candidate's publications, with the former taking precedence. "The department is required to solicit a written assessment on the candidate's research from experts in the field at other institutions," Sprecher explained.

An assistant professor's effectiveness as a teacher is primarily determined by student evaluations, although professorial evaluation (having a colleague view the candidate while teaching) and consultations with students may be considered, depending on the department.

University and public service is determined by the number and nature of the committees the assistant professor has served on outside of his or her professional field.

Professional competence includes attendance at scholarly meetings, service on departmental committees and consultation on professional affairs.

The tenure process at UCSB originates at the departmental level. Department members ranking higher than the candidate take part in the recommendation. The department chair forwards the evaluation to the dean of the college.

After the dean makes his recommendations, both critiques are presented to the vice chancellor of academic affairs who gives this information to the Academic Senate's Committee on Academic Personnel. The CAP then appoints an ad hoc committee to review the case. Their recommendations are then forwarded to the vice chancellor.

The vice chancellor then makes a recommendation and passes the collective recommendations to the chancellor, who has the ultimate authority in all campus faculty tenure decisions.

Sprecher emphasized the division of committees. "The department and the Committee on Academic Personnel present a view from the faculty, while the dean, vice chancellor, and chancellor provide an administrative view. The administration and faculty function like a Senate and a House of Representatives — separate branches that monitor but are not controlled by each other."

Parking Committee's First Meeting Today

By ALISON GIESE
Nexus Staff Writer

After undergoing reorganization, the Parking and Transportation Committee, chaired by Police Chief Randy Lingle, will hold its first meeting today to begin addressing issues as the new policy of open parking on campus, parking lot improvement, and bicycle safety.

"The Parking and Transportation Committee consists of two students, two faculty members and two staff members," Lingle said. "When I reviewed last year's committee there was a problem with too many members. I have a different approach to committees. To have a functioning committee, it must be workable in number. We have equal representation with six voting members."

Although the final committee appointments were not completed until last week, Lingle believes this has had no real effect on transportation problems or the recent bicycle safety problems.

"We are talking about a short time," he said. "We are three weeks behind and I don't feel the committee would have had much impact. It's not an unreasonable delay. If it was delayed until next quarter or spring that is another matter."

As chair of the committee, Lingle has a non-voting role of giving direction and serving as a resource to the voting members. There are also four additional people who will serve as resource members and advisors from Environmental Health and Safety, Special Services, Facilities Management and Engineering and will be non-voting members on the committee.

The five advisors to the committee are: John Meyers, dean of the College of Engineering; Chris Ferdinandson, manager in the Building and Grounds Division; Peter Champman, campus community planner for Facilities Management; Bill Steinmetz, environmental health and safety officer; and Jeff Bass, counselor for Special Services Program.

At the opening meeting Thursday, Lingle hopes to address the issue of the implementation of the new procedure of open parking on campus, and will also touch upon bicycle safety.

"We do not have a heavy agenda but we want to discuss the new open parking procedure on campus after 5 p.m. on weeknights and on Saturdays, Sundays and holidays," Lingle said.

He explained that the main reason the new parking policy was put into action was that it was more appropriate to meeting the needs of those

Production Lines Idle; Reagan May Speed Tax Cuts

Nearly one-third of the production lines at U.S. factories stood idle last month as the recession deepened, in what one economist called a "near depression". The 68.4 percent factory-use rate reported Wednesday was the worst on record. Officials report that the processes for recovery, including lower interest rates and moderately improving sales of houses and consumer goods, have begun and should lead to "meaningful recovery" by early next year. Despite estimates that the federal deficit is headed for $200 billion, President Reagan is thinking about a six-month speedup in next year's 10 percent income tax cut, as an "appealing" way of boosting consumer spending.

The Reagan administration tangled head-on Wednesday with the nation's Roman Catholic bishops about their projected condemnation of U.S. nuclear strategy, but the bishops were standing their ground. Several of them said they saw no likelihood of White House pressure causing them to back away from their convictions. The White House accused the bishops of "fundamental misreadings of American policies" and of ignoring far-reaching American policies and proposals to negotiate arms reductions with the Soviet Union.

President Reagan is about to propose to the Soviet Union an expansion of the Washington-Moscow hotline and other "confidence building" measures, including notice of upcoming missile tests, administration sources said Wednesday. The current hotline is a teleprinter circuit designed to flash alerts of imminent, accidental nuclear attacks. The sources said Reagan, in his new arms control initiative, will encourage the post-Brezhnev leadership in Moscow to reach an agreement with U.S. negotiators in Geneva on at least some of the principles of his proposed treaty to sharply reduce strategic nuclear weapons on both sides. The initiative is contained in a speech which could be delivered within a week.

A federal judge Wednesday ordered the U.S. department of Agriculture not to lift its import ban of Mexican lemons and limes until growers' challenge of the government's plan can be heard in court. Earlier in the day, a South Florida growers' group and two citrus companies filed suit seeking to stop the government from lifting its import ban of the Mexican fruit, which had been off-limits because of a plant disease.

National Football League training camps opened in two dozen cities today but in Detroit the Lions balked at the agreement ending the NFL strike and said they wouldn't practice or play until they could vote on the settlement. Most players reported to camps this morning with elation and relief that the 57-day strike had ended.

Santa Barbara Oil

Several oil companies who want to drill in a huge new offshore oil field took their request to the California Coastal Commission Wednesday. Oil industry analysts said the field, in the Santa Barbara Channel about 15 miles off the Point Conception, should be the biggest since Alaska's Prudhoe Bay discovery in 1968. Some say the area may contain as much as one billion barrels of recoverable crude oil. The commission staff has recommended disapproval of a request by Union Oil Co. of California to begin operation by drilling two test wells within the boundaries of the Channel Islands National Marine Sanctuary. Opposition to Union's application centers on environmentalists objections to drilling in the area and to the location about 500 feet from northbound shipping lanes.

For the second time in two months, the 4th District Court of Appeals has upheld the University of California's practice of requiring students to pay mandatory fees for admission, even though some of the money is used for abortions. After hearing oral arguments last week in a second hearing on the case, the court of appeal rejected the argument of 55 students from seven campuses, at San Diego, Los Angeles, Berkeley, Irvine, Davis, Santa Barbara and Riverside, who said their religious freedom was violated by the mandatory fee.

Work on a $146 million geothermal project has been stopped because of a California Public Utilities Commission ruling that utility shareholders — not customers — must pick up the tab, the plant's builders say. "This is definitely a setback, but we're looking at various alternatives to keep it from being a serious setback," reports a principal engineer for Southern California Edison Co. The Heber plant, near Calexico, would be the first commercial geothermal plant in the Imperial Valley and the first in the nation to use hot underground water instead of "clean steam." It would serve an estimated 50,000 people.

A San Jose man fighting in court to be executed has the right to represent himself, a judge ruled Wednesday, but a public defender said he'll appeal the decision. Glenn Allen Bennett, accused of slaying 16-year-old Stephen Radu Jr. on Aug. 9, can fire his attorneys and represent himself in the murder trial scheduled to start Tuesday, Superior Court Judge Zecher said.

Swiss Pesticide

BASIL— The Swiss chemical giant, Ciba-Geigy AG, on Wednesday announced strict controls on the distribution of a controversial pesticide following reports that some people working with the substance have ignored key safety precautions. In several cases, Mexican cotton workers have not followed instructions to wear protective clothing during exposure to the product Galecron. Galecron is also sprayed on cotton in Colombia and the United States. It had been sprayed on food crops before 1976 when Ciba-Geigy withdrew it temporarily after tests showed incidences of cancer among organization officials.

MEXICO CITY— The 16-day-old strike at Mexicana airlines is costing the country hundreds of thousands of dollars, according to a tourist industry spokesman. The strike is having serious repercussions on the hotel business and elsewhere in the national economy. About 7,300 ground workers at Mexicana, the country's largest airline, went on strike Nov. 1 demanding emergency pay hikes between 43 and 50 percent. The management says its offer of 25 percent is not negotiable.

ANKARA— Turkey's net revenues in the first eight months of 1982 fell 26 percent from the same period a year ago because of a decline in foreign tourists, a state planning report said Wednesday. The report, prepared for the World Bank and the International Monetary Fund, said revenues in the first eight months of 1981 were $185.4 million, compared to $137 million this year. Turkey, a peninsula surrounded by miles of beaches on three sides, has been trying to discourage tourism, without too much success, for the past two decades.

GUADALAJARA— An explosion and fire at a fireworks factory killed three people and seriously burned three more, police said. They said about 440 pounds of powder used to make fireworks ignited. The police also said the fire spread and damaged houses next to the factory in Mexico's second-largest city.

Department Store Proposal Draws Mixed Public Response At Meeting

Artist's rendering of proposed Bullock's at Victoria and State Streets.

By DENISE WILLIAMS
Nexus Staff Writer

A large turnout expressed mixed opinions on the proposed construction of a Bullock's department store on the southeast corner of State and Victoria Streets at a public meeting held by the Santa Barbara City Council Tuesday night at the Santa Barbara Junior High School auditorium.

Executive Director of the Santa Barbara Redevelopment Agency Richard Thomas explained that the "Downtown Revitalization Plan" incorporates not only the Bullock's proposal, but also a lower State revitalization plan, a transportation management program, and a State Street parking lot on the 700 block where Van Wyk's is currently located. Total costs for these projects is estimated at $11,120,000.

Denise Conley, a representative of Keyser Marston Associates, Inc., the group which analyzed the downtown redevelopment plan, said, "the project is currently visioned as feasible" by her company.

UCSB professors Richard Appelbaum and Morris Friedell from the Sociology Department, along with Professor Perry Shapiro from the Economics Department, spoke as representatives for a Santa Barbara citizens organization, Save Our City. They presented statistics and questioned the reliability of the predictions made by Gruen Gruen and Associates, the consulting firm which conducted an economic analysis of a shift in sales from downtown Santa Barbara to outlying area for the Santa Barbara City Council. They also questioned whether the Bullock's proposal is really necessary. Shapiro estimated the project would

UCSB Economics Professor Perry Shapiro

"cost every household in Santa Barbara approximately $290."

However, Fred Clough, acting as a representative for the Downtown Organization of Santa Barbara explained that since the city is not able to levy additional taxes on homeowners, the money would have to come out of existing sources.

Clough also replied to Save Our City's presentation by reading a petition signed by 212 operators of Santa Barbara businesses, 163 of which are on State Street, who are in favor of the Bullock's proposal. He explained that the downtown businesses are concerned about the "leakage" of shoppers to Goleta and other areas. Bullock's, Clough explained, would draw customers to the downtown area and make it more "vibrant."

Clough said the proposal was an example of "free enterprise at its best," the only difference being that the redevelopment agency isn't receiving profits. Instead, he said, "retailers in Santa Barbara will receive for an opportunity like this for years. Kern said, "Now we have what we want, I urge you, don't let it slip by."

Greg Flint, who owns a stone masonry business in Santa Barbara, explained that if a business is doing well that is because it genuinely has something to offer its customers.

Tenure

The system of tenure review at the University of California is so complex that it rivals the military in its propensity for rankings, merits, and reprisals. Confidential files are kept for all those seeking professorship; if, after eight years, candidates have failed to demonstrate their ability to teach, research, and provide community service, they are sent on their way, seeking alternative employment.

It comes as little surprise, therefore, that the pressure of achieving tenure is intense. Tenure is the key to job security; without it, professors, associate professors, assistant professors, lecturers, and teaching assistants — in short, "educators" — are unable to achieve the academic freedom conducive to productive performance.

Yet, ironically, the productive performance that academic freedom is supposed to allow is often pursued at the students' expense. For the pressure of obtaining tenure is often so great that it has diverted several educators away from their primary duty to educate students.

The tenure review system is damaging to students in two respects. First, it relegates the job of teaching to a level equal to that of research. To achieve tenured status, educators must publish a significant quantity of research. This demands not only a large time commitment but also a search for funding. The result of these demands is that the compulsion to provide a solid 50 minute lecture is sacrificed for the need to conduct and publish research.

Second, the tenure system, by requiring research, public service, and other extracurricular commitments, provides soon-to-become professors with a chance to achieve tenured status despite some teaching deficiencies. Most of us have witnessed professors who are unorganized, ill-prepared, and/or unresponsive to students. Yet these professors continue to teach, protected until retirement by their tenured status.

The tenure review system is by no means void of considerations of teaching records. But there are some professors on campus who achieved job security more on the basis of well-received publications and the subsequent "expert in the field" status that such publications provide than on their actual teaching abilities.

It is difficult to fault educators for their preoccupation with achieving tenure. Tenure is, after all, the key to guaranteed job security. Rather, it is the tenure review system that is responsible for diverting the attention of educators away from their teaching roles. By emphasizing the importance of research, the tenure system highlights this university as an institution for research, not for education. Although the system is designed to admit only qualified people to the professorial ranks, it often detracts from the ultimate goal of providing students with a high-quality education.

Soccer

One of the sacrifices that students make when they attend a small, individualistic university like UCSB is in the area of intercollegiate athletics. Unlike UCLA, for example, UCSB lacks a football team, has a mediocre basketball team, and is generally void of the eye-catching "jocks" who strut around campus wearing medallion-laden jackets.

It is always a welcome surprise, therefore, when a Gaucho team performs well. Such is the case with the UCSB soccer team, a team that has just completed a spectacular season and has risen to the status of a national contender.

Although a tough schedule, a controversial call, a weather-torn playing field, and a stubborn NCAA selection committee combined to deny the Gauchos a chance to compete in their first-ever post-season tournament, the soccer team performed magnificently and deserves to be commended.

The Gauchos' 16-2-4 record has given UCSB sports fans something to cheer about. Although it is a shame the Gauchos did not make the playoffs, we can still take pride knowing the UCSB soccer team will be a contender in upcoming seasons.

Harvest

Editor, Daily Nexus:

I would like to bring your readers' attention to an important upcoming event. Today, the Thursday before Thanksgiving, Oxfam sponsors the Fast for a World Harvest. Our Thanksgiving holiday recognizes how fortunate we are not to go hungry. Join together and go without eating for just one day and donate your food money to Oxfam. By fasting for one day we may become conscious of the plight which affects millions of people's daily existence.

This year at least 15 million people will starve to death, while the world has the capacity and potential to alleviate this horrendous problem. More than half will be children under the age of five. Most of us don't have to see the despair and pain these people feel to imagine their plight. Once seen it will gnaw at you forever.

My husband and I were Peace Corps Volunteers in Kenya, 1977-1979. We became acquainted with Oxfam through an agriculture project. Oxfam is a non-profit international agency which funds self-help development projects in Asia, Africa, and Latin America. Their primary concern is supporting self-reliant development projects, people working together to secure their own basic needs, using their own resources and making their own decisions. Oxfam's grassroot efforts provides support to grow more food, raise community health standards, and learn new economical skills.

Our effort will help less fortunate people to improve their lives by giving them access to training, tools, a chance to provide for themselves, and an awareness that others care. Please join us in a full or partial fast today and send your donation to Oxfam:

Editor, Daily Nexus:

A.S. Leg Council's condemnation of U.S. military involvement in Nicaragua is a positive and significant statement. Council member Tom Pai has hopefully realized that his job is more complex than that of merely dealing with the local issues directly.

Council member Mark Schwartz exposed the importance of recognizing indirect links to local issues when he said that, "with our tax money being diverted to military spending, there's a lot less money to spend on education."

For many, being an A.S. Leg Council member is a learning experience. I hope that Tom Pai will now recognize the danger of isolating issues. Recall that throughout history, the greatest breakthroughs have come when people have linked together seemingly unrelated ideas (light and radio waves are the same stuff!). Keep looking for the links!

Hunt

Editor, Daily Nexus:

This week marks that time of year — the leaves fall from the trees, the days grow short, and it's once again time for that thrice yearly, eagerly awaited Big Game Hunt. For those of you not in the know, it is for one of UCSB's most elusive games — Communications Studies Classes. These wily creatures are quite precious, and only the most (fool)hardy of Comm Studs (as they prefer to refer to themselves) will be fortunate enough to obtain them.

The bizarre ritual of the hunt begins rather like a scavenger hunt. First the dogged Comm Studies major must figure out which classes the Communication Studies Department is going to offer, since it is never the same as the schedule printed in the Schedule of Classes. (What does the Registrar's Office know anyway?) Upon eliminating half the classes, students can usually bet that this will be the percentage of classes offered by the Department (give or take a few absent professors). Then, having accomplished this statistical feat, the major is now free to purchase (oh, privilege!) a simple postcard and address it to him/her self. On the reverse side, he/she indicates name, rank, and choice of class (again, taking into consideration that approximately one-half will be canceled, the wise major chooses four classes) and whether he or she would like to be placed on the waiting list (another story altogether).

Now, as the department letter reads, it seems that cards will be accepted on Wednesday at 8 a.m. Simple enough. The hunt is over, right? (Ahem.)

Well, as any Comm Stud will tell you, that's just the beginning of the show. Now is the time for the tactical maneuvers. At 5 p.m. the evening before, the most wily Big Game Hunters begin the final leg of the Hunt, known as the Big Sleep Out. Yes, that's right — although Comm Studs pay their Reg fees just like everyone else, they get the extra thrill of being able to camp out in the halls of Snidecor, just like there were no computers capable of handling class cards (yes, that's right, they go through registration just like everyone else, too). Seems that Comm Studs should be getting a badge, instead of classes. Realizing of course, that Communication Studies isn't the only overcrowded major on campus, look to the Engineering Department. Do those poor unfortunates get to sleep out on beach chairs, Lowies in one hand, class card in the other? No (poor suckers). Business Econ? No. Geology? No. Any other department on campus? No...

It seems that perhaps the other departments ought to see about making some such sort of recreational activity available to their students as well. It's really too much fun to be missed.

Cartoons

Editor, Daily Nexus:

I fail to understand why the humorless cartoons of Bruce Francois continue to be printed in the Nexus. The content of the strip is far too futile to be considered controversial, and consistently lacks meaning of any sort. Are there not other cartoonists who have contacted the Nexus in an effort to have their work printed? I should think the Nexus would be risking very little discontinuing this inane strip and offering a more imaginative student an opportunity.

The Seasons

As November rolls into its middle days, I look about for signs of autumn. There are few in this part of California. Not many leaves have turned brilliant shades of red and yellow, or dropped brown and dry to campus sidewalks. Having lived on the East Coast for a time, I miss the chilly days and crunching steps. California needs an autumn.

I'm never quite certain of the time of year in this state. Does California have seasons at all? Two, I think: winter and summer. Or, more definitively, the rainy season and the sunny season. Both last all year long and can pop up at any time. It makes life confusing and inconvenient, not to mention repetitive. I like the rain, and I have no overriding objections to a warm, sunny day. But there's a time and a place, if the Farmer's Almanac has any truth to it, and rain is for winter and spring, sunshine for summer and fall.

To get an idea of what they're missing, Californians need to break the sun-bred mold and think about the blessings of seasonal weather. Seasons are more spontaneous than California days. You have an idea of when they're coming, but when the air suddenly turns crisp and leaves begin to change color, you welcome the fresh breath of autumn on the same day summer sets for another year. Autumn gives way to winter with the same unpremeditated shift, and just when winter seems interminable, snow melts and flowers bloom.

Unlike the west, eastern politics is tied to the four seasons. Washington, D.C., is a ghost town in the dog days of August, as the combination of heat and humidity chases the rustlers of the Reagan Ranch East to their Santa Barbara hideout. In the wintertime, two and three-foot snows can shut Washington down, furloughing government workers and bringing Congress to a standstill. Come fall, politics up and down the Atlantic seaboard is as electric as the October Air with election campaigns. And the active sessions of Congress in May and June match the new growth and variety of spring.

Yet California weather is not all bad. This state probably has the greatest number of consecutively sunny days of any in the Nation. California rainstorms are among the best. Not one to turn down a sunny day in its proper season, or a rainy day in its time, I'm willing to credit California with a little consistency. After all, the seasons become more distinct as you go north, and the region begins to approach the seasonal ideal at moments. It is still a state far from good seasons, an though that is California's drawback to me, it is the Sunshine State's boon to others.

"LISTEN LARRY, I WANT YOU TO SCOTCH THOSE RUMORS THAT I LIFTED THE PIPELINE SANCTIONS TO EASE TENSIONS BETWEEN NANCY AND THE FRENCH DESIGNERS..."

I suppose there's not much Californians can do to get an autumn. No Board of Latitudinal Movement exists to hear applications for a change in climate zone. While the San Andreas fault may one day take matters under its own control on this count, a real alteration in the state's temperate climate is unlikely before the next Ice Age. Until then, perhaps a ballot measure would do the trick. Everything else seems to get on the ballot around here, so why not the weather?

Some science fiction writers are fond of portraying the future as a time when everyone will live in self-contained homes, and keeping up with the Joneses will mean installing the latest electronic kitchen or talking living room. Climate control within the home would be just the thing for the forward-looking suburbanite a couple hundred years from now. Turn the dial, and the plastic leaves of synthetic plants change to various hues and drop off. Simulated rain, snow and sunshine would provide new atmosphere at the flip of a switch. It wouldn't be natural, certainly, but perpetual autumn is a tempting possibility.

As an autumn lover, I will admit to being an eastophile. But I'm not a Californiaphobe. I relish those few days of fall weather as October turns into November each year in this state, and I do not begrudge the Californian his sunny days. Winston Churchill once said, "If this is a world of vice and woe, I'll take vice and you can have the woe." For me, if this is a world of summer and winter, I'll take the first and you can have the other.

Womanwise A Rude Awakening Into Reality

By MICKEY CRABTREE

I often hear people draw an analogy between UCSB and "Paradise." Dorm residents and Isla Vistans have been hypnotized by the environment's raw beauty and conduciveness to both studying and partaking in extra-curricular activities. We go about our daily lives believing we are in some sort of dreamland set aside from reality; for we are told by our parents and professors that the college life is a transitory break between high school and the "real world." So we settle comfortably into our quaint college community with fellow students and worry little about anything other than midterms, finals, and parties. Self-protection and safety measures are far from taken seriously because we live among such a friendly group of people with basically the same interests as our own.

I think it's time we open our eyes and realize that our little paradise does not stand untouched by the evils of today's society. Heartless crimes occur here as they do anywhere else. We cannot go on in this blinded state of mind any longer. People must be educated on the violent happenings on and around this campus.

I am referring specifically to sexual and other types of assaults. Already this quarter, there has been a rape in Fontaine Bleu, an off-campus dorm, and there has been an assault with a deadly weapon in the women's locker room in Rob Gym. In addition, I, as Violence Prevention and Education Coordinator for the A.S. Commission on the Status of Women, have heard by word of mouth of many other attacks on women all over campus and I.V. But since there have not been any official reports made regarding these attacks, they have to be referred to as only rumors. And rumors cannot be used as substantial evidence. Nevertheless, the fact remains that the FBI estimates that only one out of every 10 rapes are reported at best.

"Why do victims withhold this information from the authorities and the public?" people ask. There are many reasons, all relative to the individual. Some women do not want their friends and acquaintances to know they have been a victim of such an awful crime, often feeling as though they will be looked at differently, talked to differently, or maybe even avoided. Other women may feel it easier to ignore and forget the whole disgusting incident if no one else knows about it. Others have been threatened in some way by their attacker to "keep their mouths shut." Still others feel they will have to deal with the identifying and prosecuting of their attacker in court if they should report it to the police.

However, by suppressing the fact that she has been raped, the victim reinforces two common myths about sexual assaults: one, the public continues to believe that rape does not occur here at UCSB because there has been no factual news story describing such an incident; and two, the attacker believes that rape is an acceptable act because his victim has allowed him to get away with his crime, thus giving him the freedom to attack other women.

Rape is not a condoned act. Victims must step forward in order to protect themselves and other women from such criminals. In general, rape is a crime committed by men victimizing women. In order to end such terror, women and men must join forces to work together on eliminating this problem from society. In the meantime, there are things we can do. We can take safeguards on a daily basis.

There is no sure-fire method of preventing rape and other types of assaults. There is no one specific type of person sought out or avoided by a rapist. We are all potential victims. However, we can take precautions against being attacked. The first step is to educate ourselves and those around us on all the facts and fallacies regarding rape, thus becoming aware that the problem exists here and now. The most accurate information can be obtained in the Women's Center or the A.S. Status of Women office, both on campus, or at the Santa Barbara Rape Crisis Center in Goleta.

The next step is to think and plan ahead. We must make a conscious effort to protect ourselves. Avoid dark and secluded areas. Walk or ride your bike on well-lit, well-traveled paths, even if it takes a few minutes longer to reach your destination than some short-cut you may know of.

Utilize the "Buddy System." There is strength in numbers. Travel in groups of two or more, especially at night. Instead of going to or from the library, the store, a party, or anywhere else alone, buddy-up with a roommate, friend or classmate. If possible, make these arrangements ahead of time to alleviate any worries when the time comes to leave. If you are somewhere in I.V. or on campus with no traveling companion, then by all means call the CSO. The Community Service Organization is a 24-hour escort service, among other things. All you have to do is dial their phone number, 961-2000, or if on campus, just pick up a red phone, and someone will be sent to your location to accompany you on foot or on bike to any place you desire in I.V. or on campus. Some people have stated that the CSO may be responding too slowly. Since their services are being utilized by many people, you may be asked to wait five to 20 minutes. Unfortunately you cannot call ahead and make reservations for an escort because of possible emergencies they may have to respond to. In any event, keep in mind that the protection they provide is well worth the wait.

Again, we must be aware of the possibility that each and every one of us could be a victim. Don't allow yourself, or others close to you, to be a target for assault. Take the necessary precautions to decrease your chances of being attacked, and remind those around you to do the same.

If you have any information regarding any assaults on campus or in I.V., please call the UCSB Police Department at 961-3446, or call Cherie Gurse, the Rape Prevention Education Coordinator for the Women's Center, at 961-3778.

Even in our little paradise, rape is a reality. Mickey Crabtree is the Violence Prevention and Education Coordinator on the A.S. Commission on the Status of Women.

Available Winter Quarter UCen Advisory Board Expected To Approve New A.S. Typing Service

By SHARI UNITAN
 Nexus Staff Writer

The new Associated Students Typing Service, which initially encountered some problems, is expected to be formally approved by the University Center Advisory Board in their first meeting next week.

The service, scheduled to open winter quarter will be located in the storage room behind the A.S. Notetaking Service in the University Center, A.S. Off-Campus Representative Robijn Van Giesen said.

Although the service is, according to Pete Zerilli, A.S. Internal Vice President, "ready to go as soon as we meet with the UCen Advisory Board," there were some problems in the initial stages of the proposal.

Dwight Rim, A.S. Rep-at-large, explained the problem as merely, "A space problem in the UCen." However, Zerilli described it as, "More of a problem with the administrators." The passage of the Typing Service proposal depended on a meeting with the UCen Advisory Board. Zerilli further explained the administrative involvement: "the administration was playing political games with the appointment process of political committees." The inconsistencies stemmed from a misunderstanding of exactly how the process of appointing people was to be made. Rules were being changed, making the appointments invalid, therefore committees could not form.

"In the meantime, the UCen Advisory Board had been unable to meet for eight and a half weeks," Jay Weiss, A.S. President said.

Zerilli explained that although problems had occurred, the situation was clearing up. "We received a letter from Chancellor Huttenback on Thursday saying everything had been cleared up, and the UCen Advisory Board can be called together at any point now."

Gene Barton, Director of Student Auxiliary Enterprises, and had of the board, had little to comment on the problem. "I don't know that anything is blocking the completion of the service," he said. He also added that he had spoken to Zerilli and Weiss, and was now willing to call the UCen Advisory Board together at any time.

Lanier micro-wordprocessors have been selected for the service, along with a hired proofreader to make the typed material both accurate and professional-looking.

In addition, Van Giesen stated that the Typing Service would be competitive in terms of cost. "We foresee it as being slightly less expensive, and definitely competitive with the current independent typists."

The service was originally the idea of Paige Anderson, head of A.S. Notetaking. He has proposed that the service be associated with the notetaking service, in order to consolidate typists and insure continual work for them.

Student Organizations Strive To Build Systemwide Communication

By CARSON BECKER
 Nexus Staff Writer

A U.C. systemwide meeting for various student organizations was held recently at UCLA to develop a sort of "network" between the different schools and to enhance efficiency of projects. The meeting was informal and designed to be an exchange of ideas and methods between student representatives.

UCSB groups represented included the Academic Affairs Board, the Black Students' Union, the Chancellor's Advisory Committee on Affirmative Action and the Associated Students. Other groups meeting included California Community Colleges, the State Council on Academic Affairs and the State Council on Registration Fees.

Ann Rowe, statewide coordinator for the Academic Affairs Board and UCSB student representative, said, "We were all exchanging ideas on how each campus operates." Rowe added that at UCSB there is a lack of communication between departments compared to some of the other campuses, and she feels there needs to be more student representation, especially on the departmental level. "There needs to be more student participation in decisions made by department heads," she said.

Right now AAB is working on establishing a student liaison program that would have students sit in on department meetings and would enact other forms of student representation, especially on the departmental level. "There needs to be more student participation in decisions made by department heads," she said.

Another area the AAB is working on is the student unions and organizations. "We need stronger student unions here on campus. I think those are really important," Rowe added.

Rowe discussed the possibility of UCSB establishing a student-teacher evaluation publication which would collect viewpoints and opinions from both students and teachers on specific classes and what they offer and entail. The publication would provide different perspectives on classes and list a percentage of student recommendations.

"It's not at all a negative type thing. It'll be a good way for students to understand more about the classes and the campus," Rowe said.

Other campuses have this type of publication which is funded by a statewide committee on instructional improvement. The grant supports a paid staff for the process of publicizing the evaluatory information. Davis receives $10,000 a year for this purpose and U.C. San Diego receives almost $6,000 yearly.

"We are looking into ways to tap that resource in order to publish here at UCSB," Rowe said.

UCSB's AAB is hoping to run a survey through the Student Outreach Board to find out whether this is something they should pursue. "We need feedback on whether or not the students want something like this (the student-teacher evaluation) or not," Rowe said.

U.C. Riverside is boycotting the Academic Senate because they feel they are not being able to be as effective as they would like due to barriers against student representation. They feel that they are only "tokens" in the administrative network and they are asking SCA (Statewide Coordination on Academic Affairs) to support them.

At UCLA, participation by students on the Academic Senate is seen to be a "privilege" rather than a necessity. At Davis there seems to be a good relationship between the Academic Senate and the students, as there are at least two student representatives per committee, Rowe said.

Mary Pierce, undergraduate representative to UCSB's chancellor's advisory committee for affirmative action, attended the meeting this weekend to help determine a new

Scoville Stresses Importance Of 'Qualitative' Weapons Reduction

By CHRIS CORCORAN
Nexus Staff Writer
Herbert Scoville, Jr., president of the public interest group Arms Control Association, was the main speaker Tuesday for a panel discussion entitled, "The Prospect for Arms Reduction and Disarmament."

The dialogue, sponsored by the Hutchins Center for the Study of Democratic Institutions, began with Scoville's address in which he stressed the need for a qualitative reduction in nuclear arms rather than just a quantitative reduction. After the address, the nine panel participants who included professors, arms control experts, center members and one graduate student, asked questions and gave opinions about nuclear arms reduction.

In his opening remarks, Scoville said, "The arms race today is being primarily fueled by the new types of weapons that are being procured by both the Soviet Union and the U.S., much more than by the numbers of weapons on both sides. These types of weapons, specifically the MX and Trident II missiles, make war much more likely rather than deterring nuclear war."

Scoville cited the new, highly accurate MX and Trident II missiles as destabilizing elements in the arms race because they are classified as first strike weapons. U.S. deployment of these weapons, he said, pushes the Soviets into a position of launching their ICBMs on warning of an attack. At this point, neither country has a "launch on warning policy," but given the probability of computer malfunctions falsely reporting missile attacks, this retaliatory policy increases the risk of nuclear war.

Scoville explained that a treaty calling for a major reduction in numbers of missiles won't actually reduce the risk of war if the superpowers are allowed to keep their newest weapons.

Scoville said the big problem with the SALT II Treaty, despite the fact that it is being adhered to, is that it allowed for the production of one new type of ICBM for each superpower. At one point, he said, the Soviets were willing to stop production of ICBMs but Carter felt that the U.S. needed more.

Scoville credits the grassroots anti-nuclear movement here and in Europe with pushing the western powers into negotiations. However, even if President Reagan is in favor of a freeze, the way he's going about it doesn't make sense to Scoville. "He wants to buy every weapon he can now and then in the future stop the buildup. The time to freeze is now before the new weapons increase the risk of war," he said.

Reagan's START proposal calls upon the Soviets to reduce their ICBMs, which constitute 75 percent of their nuclear stockpile, from 5,000 to 2,500. Meanwhile Reagan wants to increase U.S. ICBMs to an equal number as well as upgrading them. Scoville said this is unacceptable to the Soviets and this "prompt deterrent" by the U.S. translates as a first strike posture to the Soviets.

"As long as Reagan insists on U.S. MX and Trident II missiles increasing from 1,600 to 5,000 warheads, then the window of vulnerability will open wider," Scoville said.

A question was asked by Fred Neal, executive vice president of the American Committee on East-West Accord, about the viability of the present Geneva negotiations. Scoville answered that while he felt the negotiations are effective, the largest determining factor in arms reduction is in Congress where the money for arms is controlled.

Michelle Togut, a graduate student at the center, said how important it was for the nuclear freeze movement to get the kind of technical expertise being presented at the conference funneled down to the grassroots level.

UCSB philosophy professor Herbert Fingarette said the morass of technological information about nuclear arms can be argued for years. The real solution, he feels, lies in mobilizing personal and moral values. History professor Alexander De Conde agreed and emphasized how the grassroots antinuclear movement resolves issues at the individual level.

Profile

Herbert Scoville: Interest Created By Nuclear Test

By CHRIS CORCORAN
Nexus Staff Writer

Herbert Scoville, Jr., currently president of the Arms Control Association in Washington, D.C., said that it was through his work that he gained the healthy respect for the nuclear bomb expressed in his book MX: Prescription for Disaster.

Scoville said he became interested in nuclear weapons when he witnessed the Bikini Island nuclear test in 1946 as a Defense Department observer and collector of data on fallout. In 1955, he began working with the CIA as assistant director for scientific intelligence, studying data on Soviet nuclear weapons.

While in the CIA he began supporting arms control and the treaty banning atmospheric bomb testing. He also worked on making verification of the treaty possible.

Peace, Feminism To Be Discussed

"If the peace movement is to make non-violent revolution, it must commit itself to overthrowing patriarchy," according to Donna Warnock, coordinator of the Program on Feminism and Non-violence at War Resisters League/West. On Nov. 18 and 19 the Santa Barbara War Resisters League, A.S. Commission on the Status of Women, Radical Education and Activities Project, Womenkind Books and

Records, and the Women's Community Building Project will sponsor Warnock in three speaking engagements, both downtown and at the university.

Warnock will be speaking at the university on Thursday, Nov. 18, in UCEN Pavilion B-C from 7-8 p.m. For further information call 961-2460.

With the topic "Feminism and Non-violence," she asserts that feminists and pacifists are fighting the same foe. She believes that "mental weaponry" (rape mentality, masculinity) is as instrumental as the military in sustaining patriarchy.

Warnock's political history is a long one and includes feminist, peace, labor, ecology and anti-nuclear organizing. She is the author of Nuclear Power and Civil Liberties- Can We Have Both?

Spikers Win Fourth Straight Subpar Gauchos Knock Off Loyola

By BARRY EBERLING
Nexus Sports Writer

Perhaps the Gauchos had an en masse biorhythm low. Or maybe they were hit by the Rob Gym curse, which dictates they must struggle to win their non-ECen home appearances.

Whatever the reason, the women's volleyball team was hardly sharp during its 10-15, 15-13, 15-1, 15-12 victory over Loyola Marymount Wednesday night. The game was an example of superior talent and experience finally coming out on top.

Loyola is playing its first year on the Division I level. It has a 36-11 record but hasn't faced many teams of the Gauchos' caliber.

"They played as well as they could," UCSB coach Kathy Gregory said. "We were lucky this game was at home."

"We were edgy and I don't know why," she continued. "We didn't have a good performance from anyone. Our setting was bad and our passing was so-so."

The Gauchos had good reason to be edgy after the first set. They watched Cheryl LaCour and Charmaine Fillett hit kill after kill to lead Loyola to victory.

Then came the crucial second game. Loyola battled to a 12-9 lead and was on the verge of taking a 2-0 set advantage. That would be a tough hole for any team to crawl out of.

UCSB solved the problem by rallying. Iris Macdonald served for four points to give the Gauchos the lead, and a Liane Sato-Gina DeQuattro block settled the matter.

"We let down after we came so close to winning that second game," Loyola coach Nancy Fortner said.

That remark ranks among great sports understatements. Loyola not only let up, it all but disappeared. Making twice as many errors as kills, it lost 15-1.

The Gauchos fell behind 6-1 in the final set but took a 10-7 lead after serving streaks by Kelly Strand and Mary Allison. They then withstood a Loyola mini-rally led by LaCour to take the game and match.

UCSB's statistics were as nondescript as their performance. Still, with DeQuattro contributing 14 kills, Macdonald 10, Strand 9, and Kathy Luedke 8, the Gauchos had balance.

Loyola's offense consisted mostly of LaCour and Fillett, who combined for 30 of their team's 51 kills.

"Our girls played well," Fortner said. "Santa Barbara's quick middle play and serving both hurt us, though."

At least the Gauchos don't have another game at Rob Gym this year. Actually, they won't play at UCSB again, period. Their scheduled Dec. 3 home finale against USC has been cancelled because it conflicts with the NCAA playoffs.

But UCSB will still face some tough competition even without the Trojans. It will take on third-ranked San Diego State on Friday before wrapping up the regular season against number 11 UCLA on Tuesday.

Gauche Graffiti— UCSB is ranked 13th in the latest NCAA poll with a 25-13 record. The top five are: 1.Hawaii 2.Stanford 3.San Diego State 4.University of Pacific 5.USC...The Gauchos have won 4 straight matches and 7 of their last 9...Wednesday night marked senior Sharon Stevens' final home appearance.

Blue-Gold Slated Today

The U.C. Santa Barbara men's basketball team will make its debut Thursday at 4 p.m. at the Campus Events Center in its annual Blue-Gold intrasquad game.

The public is invited and admission is free. However, donations to help local high school athletic programs will be accepted.

Gauche head coach Ed DeLacy has indicated that three starting spots for the season opener Nov. 26 against U.C. Davis have been assigned to center Paul Johnson, forward York Gross and guard Michael Russell. The Blue-Gold game might clarify who will start at the other two spots.

Sports Shorts

WOMEN'S BASKETBALL- A three-on-three basketball tournament will be sponsored by the women's basketball team Sunday, Nov. 21 at the Campus Events Center. There are eight divisions to compete in, including high school boys and girls, college men and women, an open division for men age 19-30 and over 31, an open women's division age 19 and over, and a college coed division.

There is a $4 fee per person and entrees may be brought in as late as Sunday at 8 a.m., when play is scheduled to begin. There are some restrictions, however. No more than two players from the same high school varsity, junior varsity, freshman or sophomore team may compete on the same three-on-three team.

OLD-TIME BRUIN- The UCLA tradition continues to live on. Willie Wilton, UCSB's first basketball coach from 1937-1957, enjoyed a memorable evening Nov. 11 when he was invited to the first annual UCLA Bruin football alumni barbecue. The party was open to all former UCLA football players and was the first of what will become an annual tradition, according to Willie. Wilton played football at UCLA in 1933 and 1934.

GAUCHO ANNOUNCERS- Woody Chaves, a veteran Santa Barbara sportscaster, has been named as the play-by-play announcer for the UCSB basketball games which will be aired on KDB Newsradio (1490 AM) this season. The announcement was made by KDB general manager Chip Marsh. Chaves is currently the morning drive news anchor for KDB. He had previously worked at KAAP in Ventura. He is a graduate of UCSB, and broadcast Gauche games on KCSB-FM during his undergraduate days. The color commentator will be David James, a recent addition to the KDB staff.

UCSB NIKE CLASSIC- UCSB head basketball coach Ed DeLacy announced the pairings for the second annual UCSB Nike Classic on Dec. 29-30. In the first round, Northwestern will play Hofstra at 7 p.m., and at 9 p.m. Furman will play the Gauchos. The two winners will play in the championship game at 9 p.m. the following evening. The consolation game will be at 7 p.m.

Gauchos In SLO Tourney Today

By DENNIS RODERICKS
Nexus Sports Writer

After an impressive 76-53 victory over an alumni team on Sunday, the UCSB women's basketball team launches its 1982-83 season Thursday at the 7th annual Cal Poly SLO Invitational.

The Gauchos will face San Jose State in the first round at 3 p.m. The three-day event, featuring several fine Division I teams, will conclude with the championship game on Saturday evening. The other opening round contests on Thursday include: Arizona State vs. Santa Clara, Pacific vs. San Francisco State and Hawaii vs. Cal Poly SLO.

Gauche coach Bobbi Bonace was pleased with her squad's performance against the alumni. Junior forward Thyra Ladyman was especially impressive, scoring 22 points in 26 minutes of play, hitting 11 of 18 shots from the floor. Sophomore Liz Lech also enjoyed a fine shooting night making 6 of 8 shots enroute to 12 points. Lori Sanchez, the orchestrator of the UCSB attack, sparkled as usual on defense with seven assists and five steals.

"The Cal Poly tournament will serve as good opportunity to determine our first seven or eight players," Bonace said. "Thyra Ladyman is really asserting herself offensively and has been a motivator out on the floor. Paula Bowen and Lori Sanchez continue to give us outstanding efforts on defense. We will be employing an intense style of man defense that will create mistakes by our opponents."

UCSB's first opponent, San Jose State, will be an extremely difficult test for the Gauchos. "San Jose is probably the quickest team on the West Coast. If you find yourself in a track meet with them, it will be to their advantage," the veteran coach said. The Spartans were 15-12 last season and finished third in the NorPac Conference. SJSU is led by 5-7 guard Shelia Brown, the top scorer last year with a 15.7 average. She scored 20 or more in seven contests and is seventh on the Sparatan all-time scoring list.

Another returning starter is Natalie St. Mary, who transferred to SJSU two years ago from Eastern Oklahoma J.C. where she was a J.C. All-American selection. Coach Sharon Chatman garnered one of the top Bay Area recruits in 5-3 guard Dan Foster. A product of San Ramon High Danville, Foster averaged 18 ppg her senior year.

This will be the third meeting between the two schools. Behind Brown's 22 points and 11 rebounds, the Spartans cruised 75-52 last November in Rob Gym. UCSB won the first encounter during the 1977-78 season, 61-60 at the SLO tourney.

UCSB and San Jose State will be very familiar with each other as the season progresses. The two teams will meet two more times in tournaments later on in the campaign.

OTHER COMPETITION IN THE TOURNAMENT:

Arizona State enjoyed its finest campaign ever last year posting a 25-7 record and advanced to the NCAA Midwest Regional tournament before losing to eventual national champion Louisiana Tech. The Sun Devils are led by 6-2 junior Kym Hampton. She ranked 20th in the nation in field goal percentage (57 percent) and 25th in scoring, (221.3 ppg).

University of Pacific is coached by former UCSB basketball and baseball standout Mark French. Junior Joy Dana, a 6-3 center, led UOP last year with 13 ppg and 9 rpg.

Hawaii will feature a new look with three transfers with collegiate experience. Denise Thienes scored 10.5 ppg two years ago at Cal State L.A. Kathy Lokie, a 5-11 junior from Kentucky and Kim Everett, a 5-11 junior from Old Dominion, will add depth up front.

Despite the loss of all-time leading scorer Laura Buehning, Cal Poly SLO will have eight players back from last year's squad. An interesting note to veteran Gauche watchers: Irene Coffey, a 5-8 junior who played her freshman year at UCSB before transferring to Hancock College, is one of four newcomers.

NEXUS/Greg Harris

The Gauchos will need Karen Griffith's size when they open the season today in the SLO Tournament.

Nuclear Testing...

In 1963, Scoville worked with the Arms Control Disarmament Agency which developed the Non-Proliferation Treaty signed in 1968.

Scoville also helped develop safeguards such as site inspections of nuclear power plants to monitor possible production of fissionable material to be used in weapons. The International Atomic Energy Agency in Vienna then gave Scoville's agency the authority to implement these safeguards which are still in effect worldwide.

The ACA, of which Scoville is now president, is a public information group which publishes a newsletter, sponsors conferences, and holds press briefings on how arms control can contribute to world safety. The organization's monetary support comes from several private foundations.

Scoville said he supports a weapons freeze at current levels and feels any increase of nuclear weapons by either the Soviet Union or the United States endangers world peace.

Scoville also emphasized the need for U.S. reliance on submarine missile systems as an effective deterrent against nuclear war.

Scoville explained that land-based missiles, especially in Europe, are sitting targets and force the Soviets into making decisions too fast in the event of war in that area of the world.

"The Pershing II and long range cruise missiles can hit Moscow in six or seven minutes from the time of launch. The obvious action by the Kremlin in the event of a German conflict situation would be immediately wipe out these missiles using their own nuclear missiles," Scoville said.

Student Groups

five-year plan for AA, and to consider reasons why previous five-year plans have not been thoroughly effective.

Miguel Ceballos, U.C. Student Lobby associate director, initiated the student systemwide Committee on Affirmative Action and Social Change which met this weekend to organize better representation for the five-year plan. The committee is systemwide in hopes of unifying the nine campuses to achieve common goals. They also hope this will help to eliminate inefficiency by learning from previous mistakes made concerning the five-year plan by the respective campuses," Pierce said. They hope to combat campus problems together as a "union" and become a more forceful body in achieving affirmative action goals.

The Coalition of Students for Affirmative Action pushed for this kind of unionization for AA on the UCSB campus. This organization will hopefully provide a "communication network for all the groups that are AA-affiliated. As of now, according to Pierce, there is a dispersion of the groups and a lack of community between them to work for a common goal.

Darryl King, president of the Black Students Union also attended this weekend's meeting and compared present problems for the BSU on other campuses. They focused on events in South Africa and developed a "student reliance" between the separate campuses.

During the meeting they found that many of the problems the BSU faces on the separate campuses are mutual and they are making "pledges" to support each other in combatting problems. They plan to keep in close touch and measure progress.

BSU members want to deal with problems regionally now instead of focusing on each campus separately. "I found that this campus is really isolated from everything else. We're two hours from UCLA and up north the closest thing to a large university is Fresno," King said.

They discussed ways of fighting the inadequate financial aid and the racism that is apparent on every campus, according to the BSU.

"We found that our problems are the same, and we've made promises to keep in close touch with each other so we can help each other out as much as possible," King concluded.

"At night it was often an inconvenience and a delay for people to pay a fee at the kiosk only to arrive for their event late. It is no one's fault but the policy did not exhibit a reach-out on the university's part," he said. The policy was brought to the administration by Lingle, but had been a long-standing suggestion made by a number of people. According to Tina Manos, director of the Community Service Organization, the new open parking policy has caused a change in CSO hours. They now have been slightly reduced. When questioned about the increase in bicycle accidents on campus, she felt that it was not due to the fact that the Parking and Transportation Committee has not yet met.

Announcing: Interdisciplinary 5: A Survey of Computing for the Arts & Humanities

Winter Quarter

This course is designed for non-science students who find that computing is playing an increasingly important role in their studies. The advent in the 1980's of low-cost powerful microcomputers and practical, inexpensive applications programs has caused computing to significantly penetrate nearly every non-technical subject: Art, Classics, Dance, English, Foreign Languages, History, Linguistics, Music, Philosophy.

Course contents are divided into 4 largely independent parts:

- Language Processing
- Information Processing
- The BASIC programming language
- The PASCAL programming language

Students will have an opportunity to pursue topics of special individual interest.

LECTURE: Tues/Thurs-Phelps 3510
LAB: Microcomputer Lab., Girv. 2128
TIME: 9:30-10:45am
