Disputed NRC Transcripts Leaked to Public

By Deborah Nestor

Mothers For Peace Charge Misconduct

Previously unreleased transcripts of closed meetings held by the Nuclear Regulatory Commission prior to the licensing of Diablo Canyon Nuclear Power Plant were obtained by a San Francisco television station last week from an undisclosed source.

The transcripts show that the NRC acted in a "patently illegal" manner when they licensed Diablo Canyon, Mothers for Peace attorney Ethan Schulman said. Schulman's San Francisco office obtained copies of the documents from KRON television producer Brian McTigue Friday afternoon.

NRC spokesmen were unavailable for comment.

The discussions of three closed hearings held last August, during which the NRC made a decision to grant Pacific Gas and Electric Company a license to operate the controversial nuclear plant in San Luis Obispo, are disclosed in the transcripts.

The transcripts show that the NRC did not consider public safety when they licensed the plant, Schulman asserted. "The commission's motive was to avoid delay in licensing the plant due to the financial costs for the utility," Schulman said.

"That was a totally improper position for a public agency to take," he said. "It is their job to protect public safety, not PG&E's finances."

Mothers for Peace spokeswoman Nancy Culver agreed the transcripts show the NRC looking out for PG&E's best interests rather than those of the public. "It has them saying 'This wouldn't be fair to the utility,'" she said.

"They were interested in how to cover themselves legally and get the plant operating without delay," Culver said.

PG&E spokesman Gene Argo denied that the utility's financial position necessitated the licensing of the $5.4 billion nuclear power plant.

Because of the nearby Hosgri Fault, much of the controversy surrounding Diablo Canyon concerns earthquake safety. The transcripts show the NRC used a private study commissioned by PG&E to consider this problem, Schulman said.

U.C. To Investigate Faculty Study Results

By Jane Rosenberg

Sacramento Correspondent

SACRAMENTO — The University of California's senior vice president for academic affairs warned the Student Body Presidents' Council Friday against using a recent university study to lobby against a proposed faculty salary hike.

William Frazer asked the 16 members of the council, which sets policy for the U.C. Student Lobby, to postpone any action until the university finishes its own investigation into the survey results.

The study, completed by the Oakland-based Institute For Research and Social Behavior, showed a drop in faculty hours devoted to instructional activities from 27.5 a week in 1982-83 to 26 a week in 1983-84.

"I hope you will regard this in the same manner we do, that this has to be investigated before you do anything," Frazer said. "If you take this up you are dealing with some of the most vicious people around — our faculty members."

U.C. Student Lobby Director Ron Balestrieri had pointed to the survey as evidence of a possible decline in the power of student education dollars and suggested that students only support a portion of a proposed salary hike.

Both Governor George Deukmejian, in his State of the State address and proposed budget released last week, and the university are calling for an 8.8 percent hike, an increase which would keep U.C. salaries slightly above the average earnings at eight comparable academic institutions.

Frazer said U.C. President David Gardner has asked individual chancellors to collect more data on the study, which also showed that hours devoted to course in-

Leg Council Debates Merit of Nuclear Die-in

By J.C. Caruso

Assistant Campus Editor

Last Wednesday night legislative council momentarily adjourned at the request of councilmember Mikhael Smith to reassemble in the UCen art gallery. In the gallery were dozens of prints from all over the world, each one expressing an aspect of the fear all people hold in common, the fear of nuclear war.

"I brought the council into the art gallery so we could get out of the bureaucratic environment, so we could be more humanistic in our roles," Smith said.

In the gallery, Smith read from a pamphlet by Carl Sagan about the horror of nuclear war, including several descriptions of the effects of a nuclear bomb. "We have placed our civilization and our species in jeopardy. Fortunately, it is not yet too late. We can safeguard the planetary civilization and the human family if we so choose. There is no more important issue," the pamphlet stated.

The presentation was intended to convince council members to consider a bill that would call for the stockpiling of suicide tablets in the Student Health

Council Member

Service building and transportation to ground zero sites. The cyanide tablets would be available to the "unlucky survivors" in the event of a nuclear war. The bill was tabled until council's meeting this week.

Passage of the bill was encouraged by a visiting student from Brown University, which made national news by passing a similar bill last fall.

When Brown passed the bill requesting suicide tablets, they knew the pills would never be stocked. The action was simply to get people involved and make them aware, she explained.

However, because some council members complained that the bill promoted suicide, Smith said he plans to amend the bill and change its intent. "It needs to educate people that we need to prevent nuclear war and not look for options after its occurrence."

Later, the council approved a proposal to hold a Nuclear Awareness Week, which will include films, speakers and a Die-in rally.

The Die-in will consist of a 10-minute interval, during which the sudden mass death that would be caused by a nuclear war will be simulated. A speaker will announce that a bomb has just been dropped and they have been killed. It will conclude with a festive celebration of life, Smith said.

Council member Rick Berry was opposed to endorsing the phrase because of the negative connotations of the Die-in. "I'm totally in favor of nuclear awareness," Berry said. "(But) I think we should do less imitating of what we don't want to happen," he added.

"I'd almost rather call the Die—in a Live—in because we're trying to promote life, not death," Smith said.

The Nuclear Awareness Week has been scheduled for Jan. 21 through 26. The Die-in will be held Thursday, Jan. 24 in Storke Plaza.

"We're not too idealistic," Smith said, "We just want the world not to be blown away."

Kidnappers Demand Americans Leave Lebanon

BEIRUT, Lebanon — An anonymous caller Friday said Islamic Holy War, a shadowy group believed linked to Iran, was holding a U.S. priest kidnapped on Tuesday. He said the Rev. Lawrence Jenco and four other missing Americans would be freed unharmed "if all Americans leave Lebanon."

In the capital, a bomb explosion on a busy west Beirut thoroughfare killed three people and injured at least 30 others.

Jenco, 50, a Roman Catholic priest from Joliet, Ill., was pulled from his chauffeur-driven car by gunmen in Beirut. A telephone caller claiming to be from Islamic Holy War told The Associated Press that the abduction was carried out by the group — believed to be made up of Shiite Moslem fundamentalists loyal to Iran's Ayatollah Ruhollah Khomeini.

The group has claimed responsibility for the suicide truck bombings of the U.S. Embassy in Beirut in April 1983, the U.S. Marine headquarters in October 1983 and the U.S. Embassy annex in East Beirut in September.

The anonymous caller told The Associated Press that Jenco had been examined by a cardiologist 24 hours after his abduction and was "in good shape." The Catholic Relief Services office that Jenco heads in Lebanon has said publicly that the priest has "a severe heart problem" and needs medical attention.

MOSCOW — Soviet Foreign Minister Andrei A. Gromyko said Sunday that planned U.S.-Soviet arms control talks would be "blown up" if the United States violates the commitment it made at Geneva to seek an accord on space weapons.

In a nearly two-hour discussion with four prominent Soviet journalists broadcast Sunday night on Soviet television, Gromyko reviewed the Soviet campaign for a ban of development of what have been dubbed "Star Wars"-type defenses.

Gromyko also said he told Secretary of State George P. Shultz during their meeting in Geneva last week that continued deployment of NATO medium-ranged missiles in Western Europe could jeopardize chances for success at the new arms control talks.

Gromyko rejected assertions from the Reagan administration that it's $26 billion space-based Strategic Defense Initiative — "Star Wars" plans — would be purely defensive. He said Moscow is being asked to rely on Washington's "conscience" to guarantee that the United States would not attack the Soviet Union once the anti-missile system is in place.

"These weapons are offensive and this plan as a whole, frankly speaking, is a plan of aggression. We are resolutely against it," he said.

HEILBRONN, West Germany — A Pershing 2 missile caught fire and burned during a training exercise Friday, killing three U.S. soldiers and injuring seven, the Army said.

"There was no explosion and no nuclear weapons involved," said Maj. Michael Griffon, spokesman of the 56th Field Artillery Brigade. "A truck and a maintenance tent were also burned."

"The reason for the fires is still unknown," Griffon said. An army general said he had ordered an investigation into the incident at the "Red Leg" missile site in southern West Germany.

"Three American soldiers were killed and seven others taken to hospitals for treatment. Five have been released and two remain hospitalized. Several others suffered superficial injuries," Griffon said.

An earlier statement from the "Pershing Brigade" had reported four soldiers dead and 10 injured. But Griffon said a check six hours after the incident showed "at this time there are only three dead."

After initially reporting that two soldiers burned to death at the site and that two others died on the way to the hospital, the spokesman said he could not verify the exact causes of the deaths.

The identities of the victims were withheld pending notification of their families.

Report Denies CIA Involvement In Death Squads

WASHINGTON — A House Intelligence Committee investigation has concluded that the CIA did not "directly encourage or support" death squad killings in El Salvador, but criticizes the agency's lack of early information about the problem.

Responding to public allegations that the CIA had ties to Salvadoran security forces implicated in the slayings, a committee staff report said U.S. intelligence officials have sought to halt "death squad" killings.

"U.S. intelligence agencies have not conducted any of their activities in such a way as to directly encourage or support death squad activities," the report said. "To the contrary, U.S. intelligence activities have been directed, sometimes successfully, at countering death squad activity, reducing the power of individuals connected with death squads, and seeking their removal from positions of authority."

The report added, however, that "some U.S. intelligence relationships with individuals connected with death squads" may have given the impression to Salvadorans that the CIA "condoned, because it was aware of, some death squad activities."

The report said such contacts are "regrettable but perhaps unavoidable. If U.S. intelligence is to collect information about death squads, it must do so by obtaining information from individuals associated with or knowledgeable of such activities."

But the report criticized U.S. intelligence agencies for paying little attention to death squad killings until two years ago and then tightly restricting U.S. government circulation of the information it had collected.

"Death squad activity could have been and should have been the focus of U.S. intelligence collection earlier than it was and a topic of U.S. intelligence analysis available to a more widespread group of policy level consumers," the report said.

WASHINGTON — President Reagan's installation of an experienced business executive to replace the committee of three professional politicians that ran the White House during his first term may streamline operations while making the presidency an even more lonely office.

For members of the president's staff, who had been basking in the newly won security of four more years in power, the surprise announcement last week that Treasury Secretary Donald T. Regan, a former Wall Street board chair, would take over the White House staff suddenly turned a time of sublime self-confidence into one of wait and worry.

Outgoing Chief of Staff James A. Baker III, who is swapping jobs with Regan, introduced his replacement at an 8 a.m. meeting of the White House senior staff last week.

Regan "said he'd sit down and talk with each of us separately," said one of those who attended but spoke only on condition he not be identified. "So we're pretty much just waiting for that to happen."

Although Regan has promised not to fire anyone, others know his promised consolidation of power and reorganization of staff may leave no room for them and are looking for jobs they can jump to if things don't work out.

Michael K. Deaver, one of Reagan's "Big Three" aides during the first term who already has announced plans to leave government and helped engineer the switch to Regan, predicted in an interview that Regan's record of success would improve despite the departure from the White House of the president's most experienced and trusted advisers.

Fair Hearing Sought For Diablo Rate Increase

SAN FRANCISCO — Attorney General John Van De Kamp's proposal to forbid participants in the Diablo Canyon rate case from contacting Public Utilities Commission members outside the hearings goes before a hearing officer Monday.

The unusual ban, which Van De Kamp says would promote fairness and public confidence in the multibillion-dollar proceedings, is endorsed by the PUC's consumer advocate staff but opposed by a private consumer leader as well as Pacific Gas & Electric Co.

The first of two reactors in the long-delayed nuclear power plant on the San Luis Obispo County coast is scheduled to begin full commercial operation at the end of February, but it may be two years before the PUC decides how much of the cost can be passed along to ratepayers.

PG&E wants to charge the entire $5.4 billion cost of the plant to its 3.6 million customers over 30 years, starting with an increase of $353 million this year, or $2.48 in the average monthly electric bill. The commission must decide how much of the cost was "reasonable and prudent" and can be included in rates.

The PUC is required to base its decision on evidence at the hearings, but commissioners and their staff are not prohibited from talking to participants outside the public sessions.

SAN FRANCISCO — A group upset about U.S. Postal Service plans to put Father Juniperio Serra on a postage stamp says it's an unconstitutional mingling of church and state that grew out of religious lobbying for Serra's sainthood.

The group, Americans United for Separation of Church and State, said plans to issue the 44-cent stamp in August commemorating the 200th anniversary of Serra's death represents a government promotion of religious figures.

"The courts of this nation have uniformly held that government may not entangle itself in religion," Americans United Executive Director Robert Maddox wrote to Postmaster General Paul Carlin.

Garbage Can Ordinance Killed By Council

By Linda Weber
Reporter

Mayor, Police Cite Enforcement Troubles

A proposed ordinance that would have prevented the homeless people of Santa Barbara from removing food from garbage cans was voted down by the Santa Barbara City Council earlier this month.

"The main reason (the ordinance was not adopted) is it would be too difficult to enforce," Santa Barbara Mayor Sheila Lodge said.

It was proposed by local merchants and citizens connected with the West Beach Community Association, Lodge said. The group formed three months ago to confront the homeless problem in the area.

Paul Aiello, a market owner and spokesperson for the association, declined to comment.

A similar law was passed last September in Fort Lauderdale, Florida, Lodge said. The law makes it illegal to take garbage from a refuse container without the written permission of the owner.

Lodge believes much of

Had the City Council ordinance been passed, homeless people like Ken could no longer legally search garbage cans for food.

BRENTON KELLY/Nexus

the concern over the homeless has been created because the homeless themselves have changed. "Before, there were older men who didn't threaten people. Now, the homeless are younger and abled and are much more aggressive, violent and threatening. This law would have given police officers more leverage on unlawful behaviors."

"If the garbage law was passed, the homeless people would not be affected much at all," Gerald Lowry, chief of the Santa Barbara Police Department, said.

"The police department would not intend to enforce it

(the garbage law). We're against it and we wouldn't specifically patrol dumpsters, but if a citizen made a complaint, we would enforce it."

Lowry believes Florida

enforces their law through citizen complaints and citations.

Proponents of the law cited the health hazards of the present situation. The proposed law could possibly have reduced health hazards, Ben Gale, director of Environmental Health Services, said, while remaining neutral on the ordinance. "When food and detergents are in the same container, there is a very strong potential for contagious and communicable diseases."

In addition to the proposed garbage can law, city council is seeking to improve street lighting in the West Beach area and add fencing near the Moreton Bay fig tree in order to deal with the problems caused by the homeless people, Lodge said. The ordinance concerning the lights and fencing has been received by the Park and Recreation Commission for comments and financial statements, she said. City council members will discuss this ordinance in six to eight weeks.

Child Abuse Referrals Rise
 Santa Barbara Agency Offers Counseling

By Colleen Kent
 Reporter

One afternoon a young mother carrying an infant walked into the CALM house and suddenly exploded into tears, almost tossing her child at one of the office staff. The woman, abused as a child herself, screamed that she no longer wanted her baby.

Within minutes a childcare worker arrived to care for the baby, and the woman was taken into counseling. This story, related in an article "CALM at Work," by Judy Bennett, is just one example of the many cases treated by the Child Abuse Listening Mediation, Incorporated.

CALM, a Santa Barbara organization, is part of a network of public and private agencies in Santa Barbara concerned with the problems of child abuse. It serves as the coordinating agency for the Santa Barbara County Child Abuse Prevention System.

"We look upon child abuse as a community problem," said Michael Long, new Executive Director of CALM. CALM is striving to get the community involved in its programs, he added.

In Santa Barbara, referrals to CALM have increased 60 percent in the last year-and-a-half. In 1983, 60 cases were reported in Santa Barbara County, but, according to Long, child abuse is more prevalent than statistics imply, because only a fraction of child abuse cases are ever reported, Long said.

Of the 58 counties in California, Santa Barbara was ranked 54th in terms of reported cases of sexual abuse in 1983, he explained. Santa Barbara is an affluent community he added, and the affluent tend to go to private professionals for help rather than reporting the problem or going to an organization such as CALM.

The major categories of abuse are emotional abuse, neglect, physical abuse, and sexual abuse, Juan Gutierrez, a CALM volunteer explained. Sexual abuse is the most common at CALM, Long said. National statistics show that one out of four girls and one out of 10 boys have been sexually abused by age 18.

CALM sees very few boys abused by women, and little research has been done on boys as victims of sexual abuse, Gutierrez said. Most of the victims are female children.

Among the services CALM provides are: "individual counseling for the victim, for the offender, and for the offender's mate usually the victim's mother," Long said. "It is important (to emotional recovery) to strengthen the relationship between the victim and her mother."

A concerned family visits CALM where child abuse counseling is available.

Other counseling services provided include marital and family counseling and support groups. The goal of CALM is to break the cycle of child abuse, since abuse victims often grow up to abuse their own children, Long said.

CALM also helps operate the 24-hour CALL-Line, a hotline which provides a volunteer who will listen during stressful times and crises, and provides access to all of CALM's other services.

As Executive Director, one of Long's responsibilities is writing grant proposals. Currently, he is at work on a proposal to involve junior and senior high school students in skits on child abuse to be performed for younger children. The concept is that children might relate easier to young people and skits teaching them about child abuse rather

Film Explores Hidden Racism In Discussion Group Setting

By Linda Glassel
Regents Reporter

Racism, sexism, discrimination — as a whole, many believe America has come a long way in its fight against these prejudices. However, according to Holly Brown, UCSB Women's Center office assistant, more must be done to increase the awareness of these problems.

The issue of discrimination at UCSB is a subtle one, Brown said. "People don't realize their attitudes are prejudiced or racist," she said. Most discrimination on campus is not conscious; it is a problem which stems from a lack of sensitivity, she said.

As long as racism is in the system, it will be present in our daily lives as well, according to UCSB sociology professor Sethard Fisher. Yet the answer lies not in merely recognizing the problem, but in the formulation of an effective solution, Fisher said.

One method employed by the Women's Center to reach this objective is through films such as Coming of Age, which will be shown at the Cafe Interim Jan. 17.

The movie will confront the "conflict-like" issues of sexism and racism prevalent in the 1980s in group dialogue form, which is the best way to create needed awareness, Brown said. "To me, the best way to resolve these issues is to talk to the people concerned. Seeing others expressing opinions and learning from each other as is done in the film, is a way to resolve problems, (begin) better communication, and improve relationships," she said.

"This film is about an experience amongst a group of young people in a controlled environment coming to grips with racial and sexual issues," said Tony Sol, program assistant at the National Conference on Christians and Jews.

The attitudes presented are excerpts from a program entitled Brotherhood/Sisterhood USA, an awareness camp sponsored by the National Conference on Christians and Jews. The camp, held twice a year in the Los Angeles area, teaches young people how to identify and deal with the social problems they face in today's society.

"People don't realize their attitudes are prejudiced or racist."

— Holly Brown

"There is a lot of racial tension among people today," Sol explained. "A lot of these feelings and emotions come through in the film," he said.

The presentation of the film will be followed by a discussion, to enhance the film's message and enable the viewers to assess their reactions, Brown said. According to Brown, the center would like to see a good balance of men and women at the presentation, as the subject matter applies to both.

than to adults talking to them.

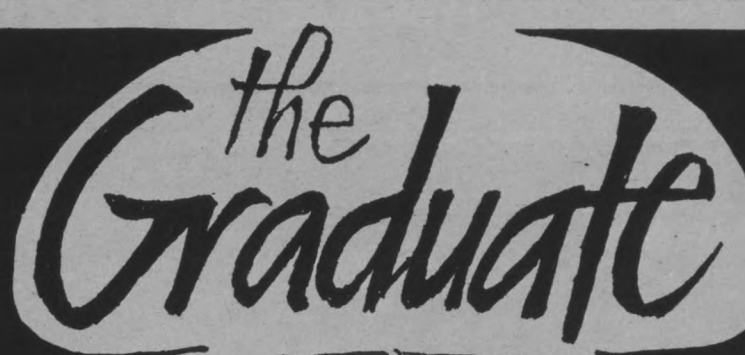

Two aspects of the proposal involve the plan to instruct teachers how to spot signs of child abuse and to involve the Parents United Group (parents of sexually molested children) in talking with other parents. The CALM staff hopes to get the community more involved and to educate the public about the problems of child abuse, Long said.

CALM was begun in 1970 by a nurse, Claire Miles, as an effort to reach parents before they abused their children. CALM was the first organization of this type in the United States, and the concept has since branched out across the country, Long said.

In 1982 CALM merged with PACT (Protecting and Caring Together), another non-profit agency specializing in the problems of child sexual abuse. It is the only private and non-profit agency in Santa Barbara County which supplies extensive services relating to child abuse, sexual or otherwise, Long explained.

The CALL-Line hotline can be reached at 569-2255. Information about becoming a Volunteer is available at the CALM office, 682-1366, or at 2565 Puesta del Sol, next to the Museum of Natural History.

An Alternative To T

Eduardo Velasquez

The once popular lyrics, "I can't get no satisfaction," apply to every conceivable epoch in human history. From Woodstock, mini skirts, and tie-dye, to punk rock, purple mohawks, and seven earrings on one ear, we have experienced almost every form of "alternative" thinking devised to protest and distinguish ourselves from what is considered the status quo.

The "now" generation is no exception. However, because allegedly we are a more eloquent, articulate, and sophisticated group than the past generation, our form of protest has taken a more ingenuous route. Today the fashion that automatically integrates us into the realm of the "insiders," is a label called "anti-institution."

Everything would be all right if it weren't for the ignorant politicians in Washington. It's pretty obvious that the nuclear arms race, the budget deficit, the situation in the Middle East, the famine in Ethiopia, and the fact that I forgot to pay the rent last month and was evicted from my $800 a month apartment, are all the fault of senseless policies on the part of the current administration. And what about Nicaragua? Reagan really blew it there, didn't he? I mean, if we had only let the humanitarian revolutionaries in Managua progress on their path of social transformation, we would not be faced with another Cuba.

One is often considered misinformed, misguided, or just plain stupid for believing that the president is correct in his analysis of the Sandinista dictatorship in Nicaragua. Because it is fashionable to believe Mr. Reagan cannot possibly interpret the Nicaraguan situation truthfully, many students are often led to believe that an "alternative" analysis is needed to understand the situation correctly. How unfortunate that the words and actions of the Sandinistas clearly repudiate the credibility of these "alternative" solutions.

Humberto Ortega, Nicaraguan minister of defense, said in August 1981: "Sandinismo, that beautiful tradition of this people that ... kept (us)

The Ultimate Demon

Thinking about a nuclear holocaust is unsettling, but we live under the threat of this ultimate demon every day. The recent negotiations between Secretary of State George P. Schultz and Soviet Foreign Minister Andrei A. Gromyko represent a positive trend in the world-wide nuclear dilemma, but it would be a fatal mistake to believe the mushroom cloud has gone away. By publicly showing opposition to the existence of nuclear arms, we can send a message to our governing officials demanding that the talks not only continue, but that existing nuclear warheads be dismantled.

The Associated Students Legislative Council is considering various options of keeping nuclear awareness alive. Leg Council has considered stockpiling suicide pills, following the example set by Brown University students. The proposal is well-intentioned, but more original options are planned by the council, and will send a stronger signal to our legislators.

The Nuclear Awareness Week suggested by the council would encourage students and faculty to discuss nuclear war. Social changes have originated from such discussions, and nuclear weapons are a social institution in need of change.

Leg Council also proposed that a "Die-in" rally be held during the Nuclear Awareness Week. During this rally, participants would feign death when a fictitious bomb is dropped. Though lying motionless on cold pavement might initially seem extravagant, consider the potential of such a display. If enough people participated, administrators and local politicians would be forced to recognize the strength of anti-nuclear weapon sentiment on campus. Future university and state resolutions could reflect this attitude.

Another option to increase student awareness would be creating a ballot measure calling for a letter voicing our opposition to the nuclear arms race. The letter could be sent to our Congressional representatives. Such a ballot measure could force students to confront this issue by requiring them to assert their opinions in an election. Mahatma Gandhi has shown how much can be achieved with "symbolic actions."

Kim Alexander's article, "The Barbie Syndrome," in Thursday's paper was beautifully written and well constructed. I really enjoyed reading it; especially the portion that said, "why...have...an elevator?...because Barbie can't walk upstairs. Why?...because she's not real."

Last year when I was asked to donate $84 to the senior class gift fund, I emphatically said "no" despite the allegedly reasonable pleas of my fellow classmate on the other end of the telephone line. At that point in time, not only was I barely keeping my checking account alive, but I believed that pouring money into a marble pyramid was ludicrous. My response was, "If we were setting up a scholarship fund, or if I had tangible evidence that my money could benefit someone else, I might consider making a contribution." The appreciation of symbolic art wasn't a good enough reason for me to donate my dollars, and it wasn't until graduation day that I learned a scholarship fund had been

I got quite a good chuckle from Roland A. Knapp's moronic letter regarding starvation in Ethiopia. I'm afraid the poor chap has been brainwashed by the left-wing Sociology professors at UCSB.

There is one reason why there is mass starvation in Ethiopia and it has nothing to do with "over-population." Thousands are dying because Ethiopia is ruled by Marxists, and Marxism results in famine. The Soviet Union, a net exporter of grain before alive, is the source of inspiration. The scientific doctrine of the revolution is our guide: Marxism-Leninism. A Sandinismo without Marxism-Leninism cannot be revolutionary; only with it, (and with) their unquestionable unity. Sandinismo is our moral and political force. Our doctrine is Marxism-Leninism."

On May 24, 1980, Barricada (the official propaganda newspaper) stated in a front page article, "All those who are against Communism are assassins." The Sandinistas subsequently set up the Committees of Defense to eliminate counter-revolutionaries.

When Leonid Brezhnev, Premier of the USSR, died in November 1982, Daniel Ortega (the unduly and unelected "president" of the dependent satellite) signed with other "commandantes" a statement reflecting their condolences at the loss of "the great defender of humanity, in the great fatherland." The statement also lamented his death when the "heroic Communist party and people of the Great October Revolution of Lenin are presently engaged in the grandest and most just of all battles, which is that of peace." 100,000 troops in Afghanistan and world-wide subversion through proxy nations is not my idea of a commitment to peace.

Further examples of Nicaragua's discrediting words and actions go beyond the scope of this editorial, but these serve to illustrate the concrete direction and pattern of the Sandinista revolution.

Relativism, an acceptance of diverse viewpoints, is an integral part of the Western liberal tradition, and should not be equated with moral indifference. The distorted morality that the "alternative" positions advocate in protest to Reagan's policies toward the Sandinistas is based primarily on the "chic" notion that all anti-institutional or anti-governmental attitudes are conducive to progress. Alternatives should be based on fact, not on urges that drive us to rebellion.

Eduardo Velasquez based this article on the recently published book by Humberto Belli titled, Nicaragua: Christians Under Fire.

Amidst The Mad Rush

Dave Anthony

It is a startling and disconcerting thing to realize that the view we have of the world must change, and adapt itself to the demands of the times. But it is another thing altogether to learn that a great many of those around us have already done so. Few of us, I think, enjoy the sensation of being left behind. The idea that we may be missing out on something while the rest of the world races ahead, is a sobering one. Unfortunately however, such is the feeling with which I have been plagued these past few weeks.

It all started out innocently enough; a dinner with my mother and step-father at a local restaurant over vacation. It was my first night back, and I was anxious to share with them some of my experiences from the past quarter; how I felt about school, what I was learning, and so on. Only after my step-father pulled out a pamphlet showing the average wages for college graduates in 1984, however, did it dawn on me. Evidently, they were thinking of something else entirely. "So," he said, "you've been in college for over two years now. What are you going to do when you get out?"

Things got worse from there, but even as I was shifting uncomfortably in my seat, I realized that my parent's intentions were good. Unfortunately, that first night at dinner was just the beginning. Soon came the long string of relatives through our home, all wanting to know the same thing. "So. What are you going to do when you get out of school?" But again, I was able to keep things in perspective. Relatives are relatives and their concern with my future is only natural. When such strict and narrow points of view come at you from across a generation gap, they are familiar and easier to deal with.

But when I began to detect the same tone and attitude in many of my friends, the dam broke. Suddenly I realized that the single-mindedness of the adults I had spoken to was not solely confined to their own age group. As if transformed overnight, all of my friends had the same topic in mind: money. No matter how many different ways my parents, relatives, or even my friends might put it, the gist of their meaning was clear: You must make money. You must be successful.

Well, certainly I am not opposed to such a suggestion, not at all. In fact, there are few things I would like more than to become very successful a very short time after I graduate. What is forgotten here though, and what scares me so, is that so many have overlooked the fact that success comes in various forms. The type of "success" my step-father enjoys is not, I am sure, the type I hope one day to achieve. But with all the hype, and all the push to make money, money, money, there seems today only one real type of success.

Never once has anyone asked me what I am gaining from college, or what I have learned. No one mentions growth, or change, and there come times when I honestly feel guilty for even caring about such things. It staggers me to think that no one has ever asked me if I am even happy with school. And if I am, is that wrong?

But perhaps it is only me. Perhaps it is I who am viewing life narrowly, who is refusing to admit the existence of a 'real' world out there. Few of us would argue that our experience here at college is anything but a short one. I am only too aware that we must avoid the ostrich-like temptation to bury our heads in the sands of our college years. But I also think there is a certain parallel between he who has his head in the sand and he who blindly adopts this type of "success at all costs" attitude. I have been told to avoid viewing the world from "the campus, out", that I must try to gain a perspective on things. But what I suspect "perspective" means is the one gained via having the old 'nose to the grindstone' — seeing neither left nor right, but only that which lies straight ahead.

I am an English major, so I tend to view the world through a rather metaphorical type of lens. As I look back over the past month or so at the attitudes I have encountered in people, I can't help but remember a character in a book I once read. The final two lines read, "This is not the scene I dreamed of. Like much else nowadays, I leave it feeling stupid, like a man who lost his way long ago, but presses on along a road that may lead to nowhere." Well, I realize that this is somewhat melodramatic, and I do not wish to convey this same sense of hopelessness and alienation. But as I watch the mad rush for the dollar sign going on all around me, I can't help but ask myself if that — really — is what my college experience here is all about.

started with the money raised in excess of the cost of the sculpture (sculpture?).

When I think about it now, higher education isn't a good enough reason to contribute to a fund such as the senior class gift either. Poor, starving people don't make it to college. They are lucky if they make it to adolescence in some countries. They need to survive before they need to read and write.

My heart-felt suggestion to the Clas of 1985 is to come up with a loving, practical gift to the world such as a donation to UNICEF or CARE rather than a worldly, impractical gift to the campus such as a rock placed on a lawn.

1917, has had 75 straight years of bad harvest. Some apologists like Mr. Knapp probably blame this on 75 years of drought, but less biased observers detect a more than casual correlation between communism and famine.

As for "overpopulation" in Ethiopia, tell that to the citizens of Hong Kong or Taiwan, where the free market system allows the people to live in great abundance compared to any communist country.

Before Western civilization hit Africa, many of the natives were cannibals. Many African tribes hadn't even got around to inventing the wheel. Population was kept low because child mortality was high. Western civilization has been highly beneficial to Africa, not detrimental. The problem in Africa isn't too much Western influence, the problem is too little Western influence.

If Mr. Knapp doesn't like Western civilization, I suggest he don a loincloth and move to Borneo or Mozambique. At least then he wouldn't be bothering us with his silly diatribes.

Lastly, why does the Nexus keep bombarding us with liberal editorials, cartoons and columnists? Is the editor afraid that one conservative column will negate the Nexus propaganda value and thus make its readers think for themselves for a change? To balance what passes for left-wing "thought," I request you run the columns of Patrick J. Buchanan. I don't have any expectation that you will. Propaganda sheets don't normally tolerate dissenting views.

MITCH SIEGEL

A Very Funny Movie

Editor, Daily Nexus:

This letter is in response to Shirley Tatum's review of Micki & Maude, the Blake Edwards comedy, in the Jan. 10, 1985 Arts & Entertainment section. Tatum's review of the film is so vicious and damning that anyone who reads it might be dissuaded from seeing the film, which, I believe, would be a mistake. Tatum is correct in criticizing the premise of the film, for its dramatic and moral flaws. However she is so vehement in her attack of this element of the film that she fails to mention that Micki & Maude is a very, very funny movie. I missed what I expect are many funny lines in the film because of the repeated roars of laughter from my fellow theater-goers.

Tatum obviously convinced herself that there is nothing of merit in this film, because she attacks the teaming of Richard Mulligan and Dudley Moore. "Moore and Mulligan lack any sort of chemistry whatsoever, and respond to one other as one would to a wet dog." In fact the two are very successful and funny together. The two got the biggest laughs from the screening I attended. And just how does one respond to a wet dog?

Tatum is certainly justified in attacking the sexist ribbon that runs through this film. But it's unfortunate that, in the fever of her indignance, she missed a very funny movie.

Postal Rates Rise Due To Increased Operational Costs

By Sam Lemmo
 Reporter

The day of the 20 cent stamp will soon disappear as the United States Postal Service raises its service rates next month due to increasing operational costs.

Beginning February 17, a letter will cost 22 cents to mail, a post card will increase from 13 to 14 cents and the bulk rate will rise from 11 to 12 and one-half cents.

A decrease in the annual surplus of the postal service was a major factor in the hike in service rates, the first in three years, according to Mary Frink, tri-county retail sales manager.

"For every 1 cent per gallon increase in the price of fuel it costs the postal service $3.5 million extra to operate its motor vehicles," she said, explaining some of the reasons behind the new rate. She added that labor is also expensive, constituting 85 percent of capital costs, or $750 million for a two week period.

Since the Reorganization Act of 1970 required the postal service to create funds entirely through postal rates, the recent increase reflects its role as an independent agency, raising money for its operational purposes, Frink said. "We are on our own."

Many Santa Barbara and

When the United States Postal Service raises its rates in February, it will cost 22 cents to send a letter in the U.S.

GREG WONG/Nexus

UCSB residents were not worried by the rate hike. "They probably need it," UCSB student Michael Rumpel said.

Locally, there seems to be no indication of change in UCSB postal transactions other than the rate increases. In the UCen Post Office UCSB employee Margret Bregg said she had no complaints about the rate increase.

The increases are designed to generate more money, enabling the postal service to operate at a surplus level above the $117 million to which it dropped in 1984, Frink said. In 1982, the postal service had a $802 million surplus.

A $240 million loss was registered for the fourth quarter of 1984, causing the postal service to increase service rates in 1985, Frink said.

In an attempt to lessen further increases, the postal service is hoping that new automation will reduce future hikes. The postal service intends to step up letter processing with the new "Optical Character Reader," which operates similar to the supermarket bar code reader, Frink said.

Currently 1,850 letters per man-hour can be processed — the new OCR is expected to increase processing to 10,000 letters per man-hour.

"The new OCR will make postal rate hikes occur less frequently," Frink said. The machines' efficiency is expected to lower operating costs.

The Santa Barbara postal service will acquire an OCR shortly, Frink said. There is no connection between the funding of the OCR and rate increases, she added.

Despite the increase, the United States' postal service is still one of the cheapest in the world, undercutting Japan's, Norway's and Sweden's, Frink said.

Alumni In Medical Careers Return For UCSB Conference

By Laurie Schwartz
Reporter

To inform premed students about what they can expect from medical school, 20 experts will discuss topics ranging from the application process to latest surgical techniques at the Third Annual Premed Conference, which will be held at UCSB Feb. 2.

The conference, sponsored by the UCSB Alumni Association, will feature several UCSB alumni who are now doctors and interns, in addition to other professionals and experts in health care fields, conference advisor Kyle Hoffman said.

"What makes this conference different from other premedical conferences is that this one features various specialties and facets of medicine, not just medical school," said Hoffman, who is also director of Student Relations for the Alumni Association. The third annual conference will be different from the previous ones because, "we try to provide things that have not been provided before."

Other topics to be covered include ethics in medicine, expectations and realities of residency and new methods in teaching, Hoffman said. "We are adding new and interesting topics such as a first-hand description of what it is like to be a doctor," he said.

Susan Lane, U.C. Davis Health Education coordinator, who organized the first pre-medical conference at UCSB, will be moderating a panel discussion on health-related careers. "Our talk is designed to let people know of the alternatives to medical school," Lane said. During the discussion, a dentist, a chiropractor, a nurse and Lane will speak on health education. "I'm excited about coming back; I think it is important that I help people get into the medical field any way I can. It's easier to help because I'm from UCSB," she added.

In addition, UCSB alumnus Dr. Richard Tafoya is scheduled to speak about motivation and the procedure of applying to medical school. Dr. Mary Ferris will talk about women in medicine, and Long Beach resident doctor Daniel Cusator will speak on life as a resident. U.C. San Diego medical student David Marcus will talk about medical school, and Myles Abot, who is on the board of admissions at U.C. San Francisco, will also speak.

Following the discussion, a reception will be held, enabling students to meet the speakers. "The reception is good because the students can actually talk to the guests," said Marianne S. deCarvalho, UCSB graduate student and chair of the conference committee. "It's a chance to meet people and make connections," Lane said.

The conference will be an all-day event, and Hoffman expects that it will be attended primarily by premed students from UCSB. Several local high school students interested in the medical field are also expected to attend.

Michael Mintz, a senior at UCSB who has attended the two previous conferences, is looking forward to this year's conference. He said the conference is helpful because you "get insight into various aspects of the entire medical profession. People are looking for encouraging words of wisdom."

Advertising for the conference has been done at California State University San Luis Obispo and at UCLA. Attendance at the conferences has gradually increased, and this year's conference attendance is estimated at 300, Hoffman said. "It (the conference) seems to be catching on," he added.

made by PG&E that was never made part of the public record," he said. This means the study's validity was never subject to litigation in open court, nor was it incorporated in the emergency plans for the surrounding area, he explained.

The previously unreleased transcripts have been the subject of litigation ever since August when the NRC licensed the plant. Mothers for Peace contested the license before the U.S. Court of Appeals and won a temporary stay in August which was lifted in November. Earlier this month, the court upheld the license when the legal intervenors failed to produce sufficient evidence of improper conduct by the NRC.

Culver believes these transcripts will prove the NRC acted in a negligent manner. While the case was before the U.S. Court of Appeals, attorneys for Mothers for Peace, along with Congressman Richard Ottinger and NRC Commissioner James Asseltine, asked the judges to subpoena the documents, but the court made its decision without seeing the transcripts, Culver said.

With the documents in its possession, Mothers for Peace may again take their case to the U.S. Court of Appeals, Culver said. That decision, however, has not yet been made.

Asseltine was the only commissioner to vote against licensing Diablo Canyon. "He was originally in favor of releasing the transcripts," Patricia Davis, legal assistant to Asseltine, said.

Although he took this position, the transcripts were not released by Asseltine or anyone in his office, Davis said. She declined to speculate on who gave the documents to KRON.

The only people with access to the transcripts were NRC employees and a few congressmen, Culver said. "I don't think it matters a hoot who did it," she said. "Somebody finally had a conscience."

struction have declined from 5.7 per week in 1981-82 to 5.5 in 1982-83 and 5.1 in 83-84.

Frazer said he has no solid rationale for the decline, but speculated that surges in undergraduate enrollment are forcing faculty members to teach larger lower division courses while giving up smaller seminars and upper division courses.

He also suggested that professors reported working fewer hours in the classroom at the beginning of last academic year, when morale was low due to budget cuts.

If the U.C. Student Lobby used the report to work against the proposed salary increase, "it would be the most difficult thing you take on this year," Frazer said. "It would be incredibly counterproductive."

During an informal discussion before Frazer's visit, student leaders suggested using survey results in negotiations with systemwide administrators toward the reestablishment of a systemwide minimum student wage.

The minimum wage was eliminated in 1981, and students at several campuses including Riverside and Davis have been dealt pay cuts. At Davis, 1,400 student positions received an average cut of $1 an hour in 1981.

SBPC members seemed to lean toward rejuvenating the minimum wage with some flexibility at individual campuses where the cost of living is higher.

Balestrieri suggested that the faculty salary increase and the report be used as a bargaining chip with administrators on the student wage issue.

The affect the report would have in the state legislature, which will consider the faculty salary increase as part of a proposed $1.6 billion allocation to U.C. this year, would be minimal, Frazer said.

"I'm not particularly worried the legislature will independently pick up on it," Frazer said after meeting with SBPC members. Earlier he told them that the survey, established at the request of faculty members in 1977, rarely catches the attention of the legislature.

But Frazer said he would "hate to see us get into a confrontational posture" over the report, which costs U.C. approximately $200,000 each year.

The university expects to collect all data concerning time use by March and may present an amendment to the 1983-84 survey, Frazer said, adding that officials are consulting with the Oakland contractor on research methods.

Frazer noted that this year's survey showed the first "statistically significant" change in time use. "If there was a sudden change of any sort, we would investigate it," he said.

SBPC chair Kayleen Kott said the council will formally consider the matter at its next meeting in February. "I think we'll support the salary increase."

"If you take this up you are dealing with some of the most vicious people around — our faculty."

Counseling Program To Host Open House

On Tuesday, Jan. 15, the Counseling Psychology Program will hold an open house between 4 and 6 p.m. in 1115 Phelps to provide information to students interested in obtaining an M.A. or Ph.D. degree in Counseling Psychology. In addition, information on employment opportunities within the field of counseling will be provided.

Interestingly enough, in an era when the job market is rather tight relative to certain professions, the job opportunities for graduates of the counseling program have not been lacking. A major reason for this is that the Counseling Psychology Program has been rated among the top 10 in the nation with respect to research productivity. It is fully accredited by the American Psychological Association. Throughout its history, the program has been housed in the Department of Education. The first Ph.D. graduate of the program completed requirements in 1969. Since that time the program has grown in size from one full-time faculty member to five full-time core faculty. Should you desire information on the open house, please call Barbara Cogswell-Bailey, 961-3375.

Women Win Two; Spartans Dump Men

Nicholson Leads Sweep

By Chris Croton
Sports Writer

What a team lacks in experience it can make up with hustle and desire. The UCSB women's basketball team certainly proved this by posting back-to-back home victories this weekend over the University of Pacific and the University of Wyoming.

The Lady Gauchos are comprised of only two upperclassmen and eight freshmen, but with two victories over UOP, they lead the PCAA with a 2-0 record.

In the conference home-opener versus UOP Friday night, a sparse crowd at Robertson Gym saw the Gauchos defeat the Tigers, 63-55.

Zone Too Much For Gauchos

By Phil Hampton
Sports Editor

If you're a Runnin' Gaucho basketball fan, you can expect to see plenty of zone defenses employed against UCSB in the Events Center during the remainder of the season.

Utah State used a standard two-three zone en route to a 78-75 victory over the Gauchos Thursday night. But the San Jose State Spartans completely miffed the Gauchos Saturday night with its 3-2 zone, shut down UCSB's power game and trounced the Gauchos, 74-55, in front of 3,189 in the Events Center.

"Our zone attack was less than brilliant these past two games," Gaucho Head Coach Jerry Pimm admitted. "As people (scouts of future opponents) see us sputtering against the zone, we're going to see more zones. So it's quite obvious we have to improve our zone offense."

Fifth-year Spartan Head Coach Bill Berry felt that "the defense was the difference" in the game's eventual outcome.

"Some nights the kids are going to shoot well and on some they're not," he said. "So if you catch them on a cold night, you have a better chance to win. Of course, you always hope your defense has something to do with the bad shooting."

The swift and stingy Spartan defense certainly played a part in the Gauchos' miserable field goal efficiency rate of 38 percent, a figure Pimm described as "horrendous," especially on one's home court.

Pimm explained that the Gauchos' lowest offensive output of the season was a result of both poor shooting and hesitancy in penetrating the zone.

"If you don't shoot well from the wings and don't penetrate from the wings, your inside guys aren't going to get it (the ball) unless it's off a rebound," he said. "We were a little hesitant to do what we want to, which is to penetrate the gaps and pass the ball inside."

San Jose made it a point to collapse around 6'7" Scott Fisher, UCSB's leading scorer in PCAA play with a 19.3 average.

"I thought we did a great job on him (Fisher)," Berry said. "I am very happy we were able to keep him under wraps." Indeed, they did, as Fisher shot the ball only three times, making one for his lone two points. The 225-pound junior, however, did pull down a game-high 10 rebounds.

When the passing lanes to Fisher were eliminated by the Spartans, the Gauchos were forced to do one of two UCSB sophomore Khris Fortson soars to the hoop for two of his 19 points in the Gauchos' 74-55 loss to San Jose State Saturday night.

UCSB Swimming

Men, Women Split Task Against Las Vegas Rebels

By Mark Van De Kamp
Sports Writer

Ever thought about writing a book on the subject of winning? Prospective authors should have attended Saturday's UCSB-UNLV swim meet at the Campus Pool for a lesson. The Gauchos sent the Rebels running for refuge on dry land, disposing of UNLV, 81-32.

It was all too obvious which team had read the chapter on depth. The Gauchos passed the test with flying colors, taking ten firsts out of thirteen events.

In the sprint events, it was all Gaucho Gold. In the 50-yard freestyle, Richard Schroeder muscled his way to a 21.384 clocking, closely followed by Tore Blichfeldt's 21.451. Per Bjorkman and Schroeder took first and second in the 100 free, touching the wall at 46.83 and 46.92, respectively.

Mike Shaffer left no page unturned, winning two individual events — the 200 free in 1:41.855 and the 500 free in 4:38.08 — by victory margins of two seconds and nearly ten seconds, respectively.

Distance ace Sean Dailey showed his talent in the exhausting 1000 free, cracking the 9:30 barrier with a sparkling 9:28.842. Teammate Patrick O'Brien took second with 9:41.621.

The number 200 was a Gaucho favorite during the afternoon, as both the men and women lost only once apiece over that distance. Nils Plett took a first in the 200 back with 2:00.07, followed by Craig Hopps, in at 2:00.26. Bob Ward struck gold in the 200 breast, turning in a 2:12.55 and winning by two seconds.

Finishing up the 200-yard events, David Telford lunged through the water to touch the wall at 1:53.50 in the fly. Mike Carpenter took silver with 1:56.94.

UCSB Aquatics Coach Gregg Wilson, who was relatively unconcerned with the competition, was pleased with the results. "We had some good races ... some fast times," he said. "Matt Lum (he swam on both relays) had a very good day ... (and) Nils Plett was very consistent, he had fast times."

In the diving competition, Bill Barber took first in the one-meter with 280 points. Bob Lang was third with 258 points. The tables were turned in the three-meter though, Lang taking second with 255.70 points, Barber third with 230.40.

The last event, the 400 free relay, featured great competition, but without UNLV. Despite a great third leg by Schroeder, the team of Blichfeldt, Lum, Milligan and Boegman triumphed by the barest of margins, 3:07.86 to 3:07.89. The race seemed to sum up Wilson's words: "We've got sooooo many good swimmers!"

The next meet for the men will be the Rebel Classic at UNLV, on January 24-26.

Women's Swimming

What a difference 4.104 seconds can make. The Lady Gaucho swimmers found out the hard way, as they lost both relays to visiting UNLV by that aggregate time, allowing the Rebels to score 14 points to their none. The final margin of victory was 19 points (65-46) in favor of the Rebels, the number two ranked PCAA team, one place ahead of UCSB.

Head Coach Wilson called it a "productive loss" for the women. "We got beat by a good team," he said. "We respect them. They've got some great talent."

One thing Wilson wasn't expecting were the speedy times turned in by his swimmers.

"We're not ready for fast times," he said, citing the fact that quick times usually come in March, not in January. "Our relays swam very well. They were faster than they, or I, expected."

Saturday's meet produced numerous exciting races, and there were a number of lifetime bests for the Gauchos. Anne Patterson lowered her previous best in the 200-yard breast to 2:27.909, while Laura Whitten shaved two seconds off her former best, recording a 2:34.369 in the same event.

Once again it was "The Ann and Anne Show" that led the women. Ann Ardell swam blue-ribbon races in the 200 free (1:53.739), the 200 individual medley (2:08.591), and took second in the 200 back, with 2:14.387. Anne Patterson cranked out two winning efforts also, in the 200 fly (2:09.420) and the 200 breast (2:27.909). She was also a member of the second-place medley relay (1:55.640).

(Please turn to pg.14, col.3) things: settle for long-range jumpers or look for sophomore Khris Fortson inside. The field goal percentage attests to the effectiveness of the jumpers (except Mauryc Carr who was 4-of-8 for 15 points), but UCSB was able to find Fortson every so often.

"They really overplayed Fisher," Pimm explained. "They closed him off inside and left Fortson to flash a little and Khris was able to get some things done."

Actually, Fortson accomplished quite a bit, tossing in a game (and season) high 19 points while making six of seven field goals. He also snared seven rebounds. In his last six games, Fortson is an amazing 33 of 41 (.805) from the field. As he comes into his own, his teammates are looking to him more and more.

Fortson didn't get his first bucket until nearly 15 minutes had elapsed in the first half, but by that time the Spartans had used a 14-2 spurt in the initial seven minutes (UCSB only made one field goal in the first 11:30) to take a 24-10 lead. UCSB cut the deficit to nine points (31-22) by the half, but were never really in the game after the intermission.

"As we got behind, we had to extend our defense a little bit," Pimm said, explaining one of the reasons why the Gauchos could not mount a sustained comeback.

Pimm added that the Spartans were "extremely well-coached" in that they milked the 45-second and game clocks while patiently working for high-percentage shots. San Jose State shot 56 percent from the floor.

Conner Henry, still not at 100 percent following arthroscopic knee surgery, fouled out with 10:12 remaining, dimming UCSB's chances. Henry, who scored 10 points and added four points and four assists, picked up his fourth foul with 14:32 remaining. Pimm sat him down for under two minutes, but was forced to re-enter him with the Spartans leading, 43-29, and in the midst of nine straight points.

"When the house is burning, you have to get some water to it," Pimm analogized his decision to put Henry back in the game.

The Gauchos, now 6-7 overall and 2-2 in the PCAA, hope to keep a fire from erupting Wednesday night at 7:30 p.m. when they host UNLV, 10-2 and undefeated in the PCAA.

The Spartans are 8-6 and 3-2.

Managers To Meet

The intramural department will hold manager's meetings for Winter quarter leagues today. A representative from your team must be present, or you will be dropped from the league. All meetings will be in Rob Gym's main building except for the floor hockey meeting to be held at 7:30 p.m. in RG 2320. Softball teams will meet at 6 p.m., soccer at 7, basketball (women's and men's C and D) at 8, and basketball (men's A and B and Fraternity leagues) at 9.

Alumni Tennis Match Provides Fun For Both Young And Old

By Maggie Beers
 Sports Writer

A UCSB alumni tennis team, ranging in age from 78 to 24, converged upon Santa Barbara this weekend, the result of 100 letters sent to former UCSB tennis players by Gary Druckman, second-year head coach of UCSB's men's tennis team. The present Gaucho squad confronted the Alumni team Saturday in its second annual alumni match.

"Tennis is a unique sport because you are able to bring players of various ages together to compete and socialize on a one-to-one basis," UCSB player Kirk Hull said.

This was especially true for Hull and Chris Russell, also a present team member. The two played the most unique doubles match of the day with Fran Manis and Lloyd Garrison.

Manis, tennis coach at Santa Barbara State College in the 1920's, is the number one player in Southern California in the men's 75-and-over division. Garrison also has an interesting background in tennis and is the author of a 348-page book entitled, Tennis in Santa Barbara, a History: 1878-1982. A recently published supplement includes 1983 and 84. Garrison currently coaches the girl's tennis teams at Santa Barbara High School.

"There is a long tradition of tennis in this city and at this school," Garrison said, "and I think the community is going to get interested." He would like to see larger crowds to support the tennis events and encourage the players.

The most intense match of the afternoon was between UCSB's number one player, Jon Nissley and 1981 graduate Larry Barnett, a Los Angeles resident and professional touring pro. Nissley was defeated, 6-7, 6-4, 6-3.

Adam Rosen, a 1980 graduate who recently passed the bar exam, travelled the farthest of the alumni to play in the match. Rosen received his law degree from UC Davis and now lives in Sacramento.

"I was honored and excited when I received Gary's (Druckman) letter asking me to play," Rosen said. In his match with number two player Gus Andersen, Rosen lost, 6-2, 6-0.

"I got killed. I'm out of shape," Rosen said after the match. "The team is a lot stronger than we were when I was here."

Rosen was not scared away, however, and promised: "I'm definitely going to come back here next year."

Overall, the Gauchos played very well. Freshman Scott Morse, the number three player, defeated Ted Campbell (1968), 6-0, 6-2. Number four Hull, won his match with Kit Delmarsh (1974), 6-2, 6-3. John Washer defeated Manis (1926) 6-0, 6-0.

The doubles team of Andersen and Nissley lost to Barnett and Greg Washer, 6-2, 7-6. Greg is the older brother of John Washer.

"Enjoyed it, enjoyed it," Manis affirmed as he left the court. His sentiments seemed to be the general consensus of all participants that went out for pizza and beer after the match.

The next match of the Gaucho season is with the All-Star Teaching Pros next Saturday at noon on the East Courts. The All-Stars are ex-collegiate players who are now teaching pros or coaches in the Santa Barbara area.

Kristen Nicholson scored 49 points in two weekend games.

 Gauchos with 26 points, 12 of them coming from the free throw line. Freshman Rebecca Rehder came off the bench to score 12 points and add seven rebounds. Other bright notes for the team were Senior Susan Coupland and Tracie Hightower, who led the team with nine rebounds each. Hightower added eight points and might be more aptly called "High-fever" after playing admirably with a 101-degree temperature.

Head Coach Darla Wilson was pleased with the players coming off the bench, explaining that "they've maintained the tempo." Kira Anthofer contributed four blocked shots in only 12 minutes of play, and Pat Niichel added six rebounds.

The team employed an effective half-court press and played aggressive defense, forcing 18 turnovers and blocking 6 shots. Wilson recently worked a press into the defense in order to "create some kind of confusion to the opposition without confusing ourselves."

One key to the victory was holding Janet Whitney, the league's leading scorer, to six points. Whitney scored no second-half points and fouled out with 6:15 remaining in the game.

The Lady Gauchos completed their weekend sweep Saturday evening with an 80-71 victory over the University of Wyoming at the Events Center, raising their overall record to 9-6. UCSB established a 39-30 halftime lead and led the entire game.

"We're better than we illustrated tonight," Wilson said, "but a win's a win and I'm not complaining."

Nicholson tallied 23 points and dished out six assists to pace the Lady Gauchos. The team had a balanced scoring attack, as four players scored in double figures. Shelly Neal and Coupland scored twelve points each in the victory, and freshman Kim Brown came off the bench to lead the team with seven rebounds in only 15 minutes of play.

"The sky's the limit with her," Wilson said of Brown, who has been practicing with the team for only one month.

The two teams went to the foul line a combined 52 times in the game, as the Wyoming coaches constantly complained about the refereeing. Wyoming Head Coach Dan Richards expressed his disgust by not shaking hands with Wilson at the end of the game. Wilson saw "nothing wrong with the officiating" and said she "disputed a couple of calls, but it's just my job."

Despite the loss of starting forward Dana Panfilli (injury) and Edna Harris (academic ineligibility) for the season, the team is playing with confidence.

Wilson "thought the team did a good job" and was "glad to get two wins this weekend."

"Kristen Nicholson has adapted well to her new role as playmaker, and despite injuries is showing the form which made her the 1983-84 PCAA Player of the Year," Wilson said, adding that Nicholson is "uncanny in her ability to find the open shot."

The Gauchos are much improved over the 3-25 team of last season, and will go for their tenth victory in a league game versus UNLV Wednesday night at 5:15 p.m. in the Events Center.

Swimming...

The loss dropped the women's record to 2-2, but Wilson believes the team can top UNLV in later meets.

"We're going to work on little things (such as turns)," he commented.

Besides showing shoddy turns, the Lady Gauchos were hurt by Mary McGervey's disqualification in the 50 free.

"Mary was really upset about that," Wilson said. "That's one of her best events."

The winner was UNLV's Fleisher, who stunned the poolside crowd with her incredible performance. Her 23.769 time was .021 inside the qualifying standard for the NCAA Championships. That she followed it with an impressive anchor in the final event, the 200 free relay, proved it was no fluke.

The next meet for the women is 1:00 p.m. Monday afternoon at the Campus Pool.
