Supes Move Ahead On Plans For Cost Estimates Of Seawall

By VANESSA GRIMM
Nexus Staff Writer

The Santa Barbara County Board of Supervisors made a decision on the seawall issue at its Monday meeting, which will either bring about the wall's eventual construction or its abandonment by the county.

In a unanimous vote, the board decided to contract an assessment engineer and a bond counsel to estimate the cost of building the seawall, which is intended to halt the slow but steady erosion along the Del Playa cliffs.

The project would entail a French drainage system which would be included in a new curb along the street, and a wall along the beach below for an expanse of approximately three blocks. The cost of hiring the engineer and counsel is estimated at $15,000.

Both the cost of construction and of assessment will have to be borne by the the land owners who will benefit from the project. In terms of building, each owner's portion of the cost will be determined by the actual number of feet of coast he owns. Once the contractors have estimated the cost, the board will set up hearings to get the response of the land owners, and perhaps the general public as well.

"It is a tough one (the seawall situation) and a no win issue. I don't like any obstructions of the beach area, but I don't like to see buildings fall into the ocean either. I'm trying to remain open," Supervisor Bill Wallace, whose district includes Isla Vista and Goleta, said.

At these hearings, it will be the decision of the proponents as to whether or not the seawall has a future. If the land owners decide to abandon the project then they will still be responsible for reimbursing the county's expenditure of the initial $15,000, and also a prior $9,000 which the county spent for research.

Unless the owners decide to forego the project, the board will declare them as a special district maintained under certain limitations established by the supervisors. Once such an action authority for the department heads," said Larry Parrish, Chief Administrative Officer for the county.

Parrish supervises the heads of all the various county departments, and creates the glue between these numerous departments and the board.

"There is a close relation between the board, the department heads, and my office in cooperating on issues," Parrish said.

Operation of Board of Supervisors Outlined

By VANESSA GRIMM
Nexus Staff Writer

The Board of Supervisors and the county offices of Santa Barbara are maintained according to the same program followed throughout California's 58 counties except San Francisco.

San Francisco has 11 districts, rather than the usual five. The boundaries of these five districts are reset every 10 years to keep the population of the districts as equal as possible. The Santa Barbara boundaries were just re-evaluated this year with the greatest changes occurring in districts four and five.

A supervisor in each district is elected for a term of four years. Candidates will be able to run for supervisory positions in the second and fourth districts in the June primary.

All of the supervisors have offices in the county building, as well as space in their individual districts available for working relations if need be. Though all counties, except San Francisco, maintain a Board of Supervisors, the staffs under these supervisors vary in size from county to county.

In Los Angeles, a supervisor may have as many as 25 assistants working under him.

In Santa Barbara, four of the supervisors have assistants and one has an administrative secretary. The Santa Barbara county government, as a whole, employs 2900 people.

The supervisors deal with many controversial issues and exist as a sounding board for actions initiated in conjunction with the county.

Committees To Be Restructured

By ALISON GIESE

Representatives from Associated Students, the Graduate Student Association and the UCSB Administration's Office of Student Affairs met yesterday to discuss changes in the chancellor's present Advisory and Campus Administrative Committee structure.

Focusing on bill #012082-88 approved by Associated Students Legislative Council Jan. 27, the administration and the student groups discussed the bill which proposed a regular convening of all advisory and campus administrative committees and councils, a change in the procedure of submitting a list of student nominations to the committees, and realigning committees so they contain student chairs and administrative advisors with an expertise in the committees.

Addressing the first proposal of the bill, Vice Chancellor of Student Affairs Ed Birch said, "Of the committees listed as not meeting regularly, most of them were meant to convene only when there is a specific problem, such as the Bio Hazards committee."

The bill initially called for all committees to meet once a month, but an agreement was reached between A.S. and the administration yesterday that although every committee needs to meet at least once to ensure open communication among committee members, calling for a mandatory meeting time was unnecessary.

A proposal to be discussed in the future would require that some committees be designated specifically to meet monthly, and others designated to meet only once or twice each year.

The second proposal of the bill demands the alteration of the present procedure of submitting a list of students nominations for the chancellor's Advisory and Campus Administration Committees.

The action stems from what Representative-at-Large Steve Laden said is a problem of not knowing the criteria that the committee desires for the group.

There exists "the headache of having to choose four people to fill two spaces on a committee," without specific criteria, he said.

The purpose of the nomination procedure as it stands, according to Birch, is to give committee chairs the opportunity to have a balanced committee in terms of race, sex or academic standing to ensure affirmative action.

A possible agreement suggested at the meeting, to be discussed in more detail in the future, would enable Associated Students to give one student representative

162 Protestors Arrested At Livermore Lab

LIVERMORE— A total of 162 nuclear weapons protesters were arrested yesterday morning when they attempted to block the entrances to the Lawrence Livermore National Laboratory by forming human chains.

One protester was released, and the other 161 will be arraigned today, probably at Santa Rita jail in Pleasanton.

In all, about 400 people participated, including more than 200 supporters in addition to the blockaders — those willing to be arrested to draw attention to the laboratory's research and the development and testing of nuclear weapons.

The protest was organized by the Livermore Action Group, an ad hoc committee formed to challenge nuclear weapons research at the laboratories run by the University of California in Livermore and Los Alamos, New Mexico under contract to the federal government.

Like participants in a demonstration at the Diablo Nuclear Power Plant last year, the blockaders were trained in non-violent resistance toward arresting officers.

Laboratory spokesman William Perry said the demonstration was peaceful and did not disrupt the regular operation of the facility. Several hundred of the laboratory's 7200 employees came to work before the blockade began at 7:30 a.m. Workers who arrived later were delayed only about ten

Hart Announces His Candidacy for Senate

By EVE DUTTON
Assistant News Editor

Assemblyman Gary Hart formally announced his candidacy for the California State Senate in the 18th Senate District yesterday, under the assumption that current Senator Omer Rains will soon be announcing his candidacy for attorney general.

Hart (D-Santa Barbara) said that he had withheld announcing his candidacy until the final boundaries for the 18th Senate District were known but now he is ready to "move full speed ahead" with his campaign.

According to a prepared statement announcing his candidacy, the campaign will focus on Hart's qualifications, specifically on his record during the past eight years as state assemblyman, and what he feels are the most pressing issues facing the district and the state as a whole.

"I have a solid record of legislative accomplishment and unique ties in both Santa Barbara and Ventura counties. As a previous congressional candidate and coastal commissioner I am familiar with the issues of concern to the residents of both counties (Santa Barbara and Ventura)," Hart said in the statement.

In discussing qualifications and accomplishments Hart noted his rating as one of the most independent legislators in Sacramento, his willingness and availability to always listen to constituents and his

LOS ANGELES— A teen-age Armenian immigrant pleaded innocent yesterday to murdering Turkey's consul general in Los Angeles, for which the district attorney's office said it was seeking the death penalty. A preliminary hearing was set for April 1 after Hampig Sassounian waived his right to a speedy trial for the Thursday killing.

LIVERMORE— Demonstrators peacefully protesting nuclear weapons research at Lawrence Livermore Laboratory blocked entrances to the square-mile facility briefly yesterday before 165, including Daniel Ellsberg, were arrested. The lab, run by the University of California, handles research contracts for the departments of Defense and Energy. Ellsberg called the lab a "factory for the first strike," and added that without actions such as this protest, "bombs would still be falling on Vietnam."

SACRAMENTO— The state Assembly approved a newspaper-sponsored bill yesterday that would allow a judge to decide whether preliminary hearings should be open or closed. The bill would also require police to make public their information on arrests and crime incidents unless disclosure would endanger a witness or an investigation. Sources said the police no longer oppose the measure, which the Senate must now approve.

SAN FRANCISCO— Government attorneys scrambling to bolster their case announced plans yesterday to delay the murder-conspiracy retrial of former Peoples Temple member Larry Layton while they appeal rulings about key evidence. The government's action came after it analyzed a 35-page order rejecting government requests to admit the evidence, including a tape recording of the final hour at the Jonestown settlement on Nov. 18 1978.

WASHINGTON— A top State Department official said yesterday that the Reagan administration will ask Congress for an increase of about $100 million in assistance to the El Salvadoran ruling junta this year and will, on its own, send $55 million in emergency military aid. However, new U.S. military shipments to El Salvador will only prolong the civil war there, and stop the eventual defeat of the U.S.-backed government, a spokesperson for the Salvadoran revolutionary political arm said Sunday.

ILLINOIS— The nation's first local law prohibiting the sale and possession of handguns went into effect yesterday in a Chicago suburb, and four sidearms were surrendered by mid-morning, authorities said. Officials said that despite the June 8 ordinance, they expected few, if any, handguns to be surrendered.

MICHIGAN— Emergency contract talks between Ford Motor Co. and the United Auto Workers resumed yesterday, with the collapse of negotiations at General Motors Corp. and "added burden" in the effort to agree on concessions, the union said. Talks with GM broke off last Thurs. when bargainers failed to agree on a wage-and-benefit package.

WISCONSIN— A citizens' group has given the district attorney until today to reissue charges against two white policemen already cleared twice in the death of a black man who died in police custody. A local Coalition for Justice, organized around the death of Ernie Lacey, said it was considering civil disobedience protests if the district attorney does not charge the officers again. Ernie Lacey died in a police van after he was arrested for a rape it was later determined he did not commit.

WORLD

EL SALVADOR— Army soldiers killed at least 20 people in San Salvador Sunday as 200 government troops swept through San Salvador's working class district. The government claimed the raids were a search for rebel hideouts. Relatives of many victims called it an unprovoked massacre. A government communique identified the dead, most of them in their teens, as members of leftist groups fighting to defeat El Salvador's ruling junta. The struggle has cost more than 35,000 lives since the U.S.-backed junta seized power in an Oct. 1979 coup.

EGYPT— Libya and Egypt have agreed to reopen their border crossing points, closed three years ago after Egypt signed a peace treaty with Israel. A newspaper in Cairo reported that the move is another sign of the relaxation of tensions between the two countries since Hosni Mubarak became president after the assassination of Anwar Sadat.

IRELAND— The Irish Republican Army's Provisional wing announced Sunday it will field candidates in at least six districts in the Irish Republic's Feb. 18 general election. The move is expected to create a political furor. The Provisionals split from the Marxist "official" wing of the IRA in 1969.

CHINA— In a major compromise, China said Sunday it was willing to negotiate an end to U.S. arms sales to Taiwan within a certain time and conceded the overriding importance of strategic relations with Washington. Chinese officials have privately expressed a desire to negotiate with the U.S. on the type and quantity of weapons sold to Taiwan and a deadline for all sales.

Extinguished 13 Years AgoEternal Flame May Not Burn Again

Situated on the lawn in front of Ellison Hall, UCSB's Eternal Flame has not been in operation since its creation 13 years ago, save for a brief six month period, and is not likely to be lit in the future, because of energy conservation reasons.

The Eternal Flame, created in 1969, is a memorial to John F. Kennedy, Martin Luther King Jr., and Robert Kennedy, and contains quotes in memory of the three noble idealists.

The class of 1969 was scheduled to donate a present to the university, but "they did not know what to give, because of a limited budget. So, they turned to the Architecture Department. I presented them with a drawing and a small model of a sculpture," creator of the Eternal Flame and senior architect Vic Shoon said.

"It's kind of unique. I'm kind of proud," Shoon said of the sculpture which was donated to "all men of vision" by the class of 1969.

The sculpture, which Shoon said was originally supposed to be in a pool of lily pads in water, is shaped in a tripod, with each of the three legs containing a quote from the Kennedys and King.

The dedication plaque quotes Kennedy as saying, "the torch has been passed to a new generation of Americans... and the glow from that fire can truly light the world."

The quote by Robert Kennedy calls for the taming of "the savageness of man and make gentle the life of the world."

Another plaque immortalizes Martin Luther King Jr.'s appeal for world peace. It reads, "The large house in which we live demands that we transform this worldwide neighborhood into a worldwide

Women's Groups Plan Meetings

The Chancellor's Advisory Committee on the Status of Women is sponsoring the fourth general meeting of campus organizations and individuals concerned with women's issues on Feb. 2 at 3 p.m. at the Women's Center.

The advisory committee was set up with the charge of acting in an "advisory capacity to the chancellor on all policies, practices, programs, and activities affecting women in the university community." The committee's current emphasis is to represent the concerns of women at UCSB, provide the chancellor with a comprehensive view of these concerns, and to serve as a liaison between all groups dealing with issues of concern to women and the chancellor via the coordinating commission meetings (to be held Feb. 2 and once again in the Spring quarter).

The purpose of the first Coordinating Commission meeting this year will be to discuss the current goals and objectives of CACSW and to elicit input from attendees regarding the appropriateness of these goals and objectives, and suggestions on how to accomplish them. Ideas for other objectives, as well as messages for the chancellor will also be discussed.

Anyone interested in attending this meeting should contact Chris Allen Clark, 961-2085, for more information.

Censorship

Official paranoia regarding the leak of sensitive information to the public is a trait one usually associates with the rulers of totalitarian regimes. Under such a government, the only acceptable facts are those which have the leaders' stamp of approval; anything which undermines belief in the officially promulgated version of "truth" is dangerous.

The Reagan administration has a long way to go before it reaches this stage, but a pair of recent government actions represent cause for concern. The first came as the result of several articles in magazines and newspapers which, according to the administration, damaged national security. The president subsequently issued a directive ordering a crackdown on such "leaks" and restriction of access between reporters and officials possessing sensitive knowledge.

The second concerns the administration's efforts to clamp down on the release of scientific and technological information to potential enemies through the medium of professional and technical journals. Related to this issue is the current dispute between the State Department and several universities, including Stanford, over what a visiting Russian scientist may be shown and told.

To a certain extent, the administration is justified in its alarm over the passing on of sensitive information to the press. The public has granted the power to conduct foreign policy to its elected officials and must therefore trust them to do so in the nation's best interests. However, trust does not extend to blindness, and the news media serve as the eyes of the electorate. Regulation of contact between reporters and government officials should be a well-considered and cautiously taken step, if it is taken at all.

Stifling the free and open flow of information within the scientific community is a different matter. There can be no governmental "regulation" of what is appropriate material for publication: either scientific dialogue is free or it is not. To limit it will do as much damage to American research institutions as it will to those in other nations and can only be considered censorship.

One enduring legacy of the Nixon presidency is the warning that it is dangerous for an administration to perceive the news media and the intellectual community as adversaries. The current government would do well to remember that lesson, and restrain itself from trying to enforce the assumption that it is the best judge of what the public should know. The right to decide belongs to the public.

Oil Leases

Oil Leasing off the coast of Santa Barbara is a crucial concern of most residents who enjoy the incredible beauty of the ocean environment. The infamous and devastating oil spill in 1969 is a serious reminder of the damage that results from the mismanagement of oil drilling, and insensitivity to local environmental concern.

At Monday's Board of Supervisors meeting, the county once again voiced strong environmental concern by protesting Secretary of the Interior James Watt's ineffective environmental policies. The U.S. Department of Interior is currently proposing legislation that would allow development and production plans for certain oil and gas leases to proceed without being submitted to the county for approval.

Watt's actions are an unfortunate indication of the growing government disregard for the importance of local government involvement in federal policies concerning the environment. More disturbing is the wording of the Federal Register Notice which fails to clearly indicate the effect of the legislation on California.

It is imperative that California residents be made aware of the latest in a long series of questionable policy decisions by Watt. Those who reside along California's beautiful coastline should have some input in any move which threatens it, and to put the power exclusively in the hands of someone as utterly insensitive as the Secretary of the Interior is folly.

Editor, Daily Nexus:

Last Sunday I did not catch "Superbowl Fever." Unfortunately, I was scheduled to work at 12 p.m. because my employer, Dominos Pizza, was expecting a big game rush. Delivering a pizza was quite an experience on Superbowl Sunday, and instead of watching the game, I spent most of my time watching other people watch the game. Every living room was filled with students glued to the TV set, and the dorms made a big activity out of the whole day, renting wide screen TVs and bringing in buffet lunches. I've never seen so much student involvement in any activity. The town of Isla Vista seemed to drop everything so everyone could watch the big game. Indeed, the fever was spreading.

While on many of my deliveries, I noticed that many of these so-called football fans did not know a thing about football. Many were watching their first football game of the whole season. One girl even asked me what the difference was between the Rose Bowl and the Super Bowl. It was obvious that many of these students, especially girls, were watching just because it was the thing to do. The whole day reminded me of a national holiday, like the Fourth of July.

This over-enthusiasm really disturbed me. Sure, the Super Bowl is a big day for the real football fan, but why did everyone else feel that they too had to watch the "big one." The Super Bowl must have some mystic power to excite students and encourage their involvement. This thought gave me an excellent idea. Perhaps we can utilize this mystic power to encourage student involvement in other activities. For example, the next campus speaker to speak on the subject of Polish solidarity might think about showing a few minutes of Super bowl highlights in order to encourage student participation. Perhaps the speaker could compare the leadership of the 49er quarterback Joe Montana to the courage of Polish solidarity leader Lech Walesa. Or, at the next student government election, we could get the 49er's Ronnie Lott to shake hands at the voting booth. Who says we can't decrease student apathy?

Handguns

Editor, Daily Nexus:

Nicholas Von Hoffman, in his column printed in the Jan. 15 Nexus, seems to think that handguns would not be very effective in fighting the U.S. Army. That's true, but lately I have been seeing pictures of fighters in El Salvador armed with handguns.

Maybe the Salvadoran Army prefers to shoot unarmed people, so that the guerrillas don't have much opportunity to capture weapons. I guess a guerrilla uses what's available. I seem to recall stories from the early days of the War in Vietnam where guerrillas were using arrows (or was it blowguns?)

Salaries

Editor, Daily Nexus:

It is almost interesting to note how democratically our university is run: A firman from the regental sultanate informs us all that there will be special salary scales for Business and Engineering faculty because of demands in the private sector. Extramural support here at UCSB, chiefly I suppose from the private sector again, has tripled in the last three years. Yet, this is a public institution and, theoretically, one dedicated to the pursuit of knowledge.

Too, in the midst of all this discriminatory classification of disciplines, the increasing inequities, and the thinly masked transformation of the university into a research center for private enterprise, special interests, and defense, we are never supposed to forget that we are all equal. But I shall agree with those who might disagree with me that, as we all know, unfortunately English and history cannot be eaten, mathematics is hard to digest, foreign languages are unappetizing, old classics is stale, and we can live without music and the arts.

Yes, there is an "Upstairs, Downstairs" arrangement in the grove of academe, and there is a danger that the Temple of the Muses may become a house of ill repute. I did not forget religion, but I suppose by now we all know that God will see the light and take a crash course in computers, just in case.

advancements in societies' knowledge about diet. Instead, the AIWF may choose to study the cultural repercussions of choosing the right wine to go with jelly beans. Why don't we study the effects of presidential china on foreign policy? During such economic hard times it may be difficult to justify such an indulgent "academic" endeavor.

Moreover, it will cost UCSB something. The opportunity cost of using that building (or any university owned facility) to house the AIWF instead, of example, a student dormitory/recreation center, a conservation awareness workshop, a Chumash Indian research council, an offshore oil task force, or just leaving it alone must be acknowledged. And how much of the student body or general public benefit from a group whose membership starts at $250. With all the problems in the world it's ludicrous to associate UCSB with a group intent on "providing its members with ideas on the aesthetics of taste and smell."

Mr. Reagan is not likely to crack up under the fire of the conservatives who have met in Washington to express their general displeasure. He recognizes that it is the duty of the right to press harder than a president is likely to move. So is it with the left, which periodically meets, when Democrats are in power, to bemoan the difference between their president's actions and how things would go if they themselves were president.

John Kenneth Galbraith was once asked the question, "Who do you favor for president?" and answered, "The leftwardmost viable candidate." An honest answer, to which the obvious complement on the right is, "The rightwardmost viable candidate." The operative word, in dealing with either "left" or "right," is "viable." And the question to ask about Mr. Reagan, therefore, is whether he might "vially" act more "conservatively" than he has done.

In domestic policy he has not, in the opinion of some of us, gone as far as he might have. Here we mean that he has not gone as far as he might have rhetorically. Probably he got from Congress everything he could conceivably have got from it.

It is in the field of foreign policy that he gives a perplexing image. Primarily, Reagan is a magnetic field. His stands, so long and skillfully articulated, are unambiguous as to concept, flexible in the matter of execution. But in the field of foreign policy there is genuine confusion. It is not surprising that his critics trot out so voluptuously statements of his made during the past which would appear to apply to the kind of thing he is now charged with doing, most specifically in the failure adequately to meet the challenge of the suppression of Poland.

Consider the matter of credits. Specifically, consider the matter of International Harvester and the matter of grain.

Arguments have been made, with special force from stockholders of International Harvester and from producers of American grain, that the economic factors should probably prevail here. Everyone knows that our budget deficit is vast, that there is a great deal of surplus grain which needs to be sold to somebody, at the risk of impoverishing a number of farmers. All this is true.

But it is also true that the American people are putting up $150 billion a year in order to maintain the military. One hundred and fifty billion dollars is many times the sum of money it would cost us to protect farmers whose grain was re-routed from American seaports to American granaries. The incredible notion that the United States should supply credit to the Soviet Union and to its satellites, which credit makes possible the importation of U.S. grain and U.S. commercial products, in many cases at prices above those an American consumer would be asked to pay, is one with which President Reagan's administration appears to have come to terms. In doing so he wastes his image as that indelible presence that is determined to impose maximum pressure on the Soviet Union, avoiding the alternative of military engagement at almost any cost.

The military arm of the United States, which eats up that $150 billion every year, is no more important than the far less expensive paramilitary resources of the United States. These are: the economic weapon (we are, relatively, rich; the Soviet Union is poor, and might be made desperately poor) and the psychological weapon (our people are relatively free, theirs are enslaved). Any failure to use the paramilitary resources to the fullest extent not only increases the expense of the whole defensive enterprise but, paradoxically, increases the possibility that a final engagement would need to be military, rather than dialectical.

Mr. Reagan must not appear inflexible, nor be inflexible. But he must appear to be a stalwart presence, the locus of anti-communist thought and action. What appears, in the matter of Poland, to be an indecisiveness when confronted with bureaucratic arguments, commercial pressures, agricultural lobbyists, reduces the integrity of the stance and augments the reliance on firepower. To this Mr. Reagan needs to give thought. Meanwhile, provided they guard carefully their rhetoric, the conservatives are correct in drawing attention to the shortfall.

Draft Evasion

By DANIEL SCHWARTZ

When Ronald Reagan was campaigning for the 1980 election, he sharply criticized president Carter's draft registration reinstatement. Reagan was outwardly against the draft, except in "the most severe national emergency." I remember him saying "in any other time, a draft destroys the very values that our society is committed to defending... the most fundamental objection to the draft is moral."

Reagan seemed to be fulfilling his promise when on Dec. 10, 1981 he announced his plans to suspend the prosecution of those who failed to register. Consequently, those who, under the threat of a $10,000 fine and/or five years imprisonment, were coerced into registering, now had their names on lists that jeopardized their statuses as civilians. Apparently I had avoided this dilemma; I was one of the original non-registrants back in February 1980.

Why then, did Reagan reactivate a policy that he previously found useless? Is the Polish crisis "the most severe national emergency?" I don't hear any MIGs buzzing overhead, and I certainly haven't been informed about any recent invasions of American territory. The ink on the suspending legislation was barely dry, when 29 days later Reagan changed his mind.

Reagan's cancellation of this former campaign pledge brings to mind the policies of some of the most recent presidents in the circus of American politics. Due to the suggestions of our illustrious secretary of defense, Caspar Weinberger, and the joint chiefs of staff, the president casually forgot "the very values that our society is committed to defending."

This turnaround, in light of the announced 15 percent increase in the military budget for 1982, while unemployment approaches double digit percentages, is inexcusable and totally preposterous.

The prosecution of non-registrants will be a flagrant waste of taxpayer's money and the administration's time. Exactly how is Reaganomics going to accommodate the prosecution of over 800,000 men? The sheer enormity of this task clearly makes it unfeasible, especially since Reagan is desperately trying to trim the federal budget. Perhaps he thinks he can put a dent in our national deficit by collecting the potential $8 billion in fines against us naughty boys.

And what about those who don't or can't pay? What will the Reagan administration do with these miscreants? Is it possible that some of us university students will do time for our personal views and beliefs? For some reason, I had the impression that our jails are filled, often beyond capacity, and that they're even releasing some criminals before terminating their sentences due to overcrowding. By the way, did you know that it costs over $12,000 a year to keep a prisoner in jail?

The 30-60 day grace period to register and to repent for my sins doesn't interest me in the least. My original stance against draft registration hasn't weakened. No nice guy double talk tactics with me, President Reagan; I want what you promised to deliver. To all others who share my situation, and to those who are or will be considering this position, I hope you find the will to endure and to show your protest against this unfair policy. Remember, every day thousands are joining the ranks of anti-registrants.

Rochdale Housing...a Cooperative Breakthrough

By STEVE ENDSLEY

We may finally have a chance to make some headway against the housing crisis that has afflicted the UCSB campus community for so many years. During the past several days, the Nexus has reported two major developments in housing that are worth repeating and bear some reflection. Last week, the Rochdale Housing Project, after five years of effort, received the funding necessary to purchase its first building. These monies, amounting to $110,000, were approved by the Santa Barbara County Board of Supervisors, and when added to $50,000 already donated by UCSB, will ensure that Rochdale's unique brand of cooperative housing will be available to Santa Barbara students for many years to come.

Almost simultaneously, the UC Board of Regents approved in principle a policy that would allow student registration fees to be used for the first time to acquire existing community housing. These two events, taking place almost on top of each other, underscore the tremendous opportunity we have to solve the housing problem at UCSB in general, and to ensure the development of cooperative housing as a particularly effective means to this end. Given this, it is important that we all know what we are talking about.

Although cooperative theory can be made to sound quite complex, the argument in favor of student co-op development is relatively simple. For instance, we've heard a lot these days about the wonders of "supply side" economics. In housing, these ideas are voiced most often by builders and developers who argue that our housing problems can be solved primarily by increasing supply, or building more houses and apartments. Forgetting for a while that such a program would be stymied by impossibly high interest rates and significant questions about the environment and open space, I have no doubt that increased home building would have some effect on housing availability and price. However, in order to bring the traditional supply and demand curves into balance, we might actually have to build 1 million homes overnight.

Clearly, it makes more sense to pursue programs that affect the "demand" or price side of the equation. For example, some communities have turned to rent control, which essentially places an artificial cap on housing prices. Pressure for rent control is understandably strongest when rent increases, usually in urban areas with limited housing stock like Santa Barbara, Los Angeles, San Francisco, Santa Cruz and Berkeley, begin to get out of control and there is no other ready alternative to avert immediate hardships. However, as most people realize, rent control is a particularly controversial program and is therefore more of a political solution than a technical answer to the problem. And, because rent control has only a temporary restraining effect, prices shooting back up when controls are lifted, it cannot by itself be regarded as a structural alternative to price increases.

Cooperative Housing on the other hand, is a relatively non-controversial alternative that goes to the very structural heart of our housing problem. Note that homes and apartment complexes are sold on average, every 3-5 years. Because buildings are invariably sold at a profit to the owner, the new landlord is saddled with higher mortgage payments. Rents are raised to cover these costs. This constant turnover leads to another phenomenon: even owners of buildings that haven't been sold are tempted to raise their rents "to market". Coupled with limited housing supply and heavy demand for the product, this leads to a market controlled not by the consumer or by impartial market forces, as we are sometimes told, but rather, the seller.

Cooperative housing breaks this cycle by placing a cap on how much a property can be resold for, or more important, by merely removing the property from the process of being sold, over and over again. The new cooperative owners may well have higher initial rents than they would like, because the cost of initial financing (primarily interest rates) is so high, but over time, the cooperative will be able to offer substantially lower rents than the surrounding community. This doesn't mean that rents will never rise. On the contrary, the cooperative must assume the burden of managing and operating the premises, and inflationary rises in the cost of supplies and other expenses will have an impact on the cooperative just as they would on any other owner. Eventually though, reserves will be generated that can be used for extensive building rehabilitation, new building purchases, special programs, or even lower rents.

Student housing cooperatives make sense because they provide a stable supply of affordable housing that the University doesn't have to operate itself. Students receive valuable training in management, maintenance, office work and energy conservation. Work study and other paid jobs are usually available to students who need work. Isn't it ironic in these days of recession and government cutbacks that it's often the local co-op that is creating the only new jobs in town? Co-ops can also provide numerous and diverse services that no one else tends to offer, like garden projects, low cost laundry, recycling or newsletters. Perhaps most important of all, students can learn something about self-government, a necessary lesson for the "real world" that looms ahead.

Here at UCSB it is important that students realize what an opportunity they have. Despite troubling differences in emphasis and style, the UCSB administration's support for cooperative housing is unmatched anywhere in the country. The Associated Students have made the most generous cash donation ($30,000) by an organization of its kind that I've ever seen. In short, UCSB has taken a far-sighted approach to solving its housing problem, and because of that, we are now on the brink of success. Now that reg fees can be used for housing — who knows what more we can do, in our effort to ensure that decent, affordable housing is here to stay. Keep your eyes open for future developments.

Steve Endsley has served as Co-Director of the Rochdale Housing Project.

NRC Hearings Denounced By 'Mothers for Peace'

By GEOFFREY PLATT
Nexus Staff Writer

The Diablo Canyon Nuclear Power Plant licensing hearings held before the Nuclear Regulatory Commission last month were "the most unimportant and insignificant we have had before the NRC in eight years," according to Mothers for Peace member Nancy Culver.

"The NRC made these hearings meaningless," Culver continued, "because before the hearings the commission eliminated virtually every issue that we raised."

Culver cited the NRC's recent declaration that earthquakes are a "generic issue," or a problem that occurs at many plants and, therefore, cannot be applied solely to Diablo. As a result seismic activity was eliminated as an issue necessary to the plant's emergency plans, and as an issue relevant to the hearings.

"Since all regions of the country are susceptible to acts of nature, the question of whether or not emergency plans had to consider earthquakes, tornadoes or floods coincident with reactor accidents was a generic issue that the commission would take up separately. (The NRC) would not litigate it in individual reactor licensing proceedings," explained Jim Hanchett, spokesman for the NRC.

"Furthermore, the (Diablo Canyon) plant is designed to withstand and safely shut itself down in the event of the largest earthquake that could occur at that site," Hanchett continued.

Culver, however, defines NRC regulations for emergency planning as "not hard to meet."

"The commission doesn't care if the plan can be implemented at all... as long as there is a plan written down," she said. She contends that the Diablo Canyon plan lists the equipment, personnel, and training for personnel necessary to allow for safe operation, "but the county doesn't have that equipment, it doesn't have that personnel, it doesn't have all that training."

Although Hanchett said he couldn't comment specifically on the accusation, he did declare "that the review is being done partly by the Federal Emergency Management Agency and partly by us... But I don't want to get in a debate with those folks (Mothers For Peace). Let them debate with Pacific Gas and Electric."

The Diablo Canyon plant has not had an independent review of the plan since it was refused its low power license, which, Culver says, "made the hearings even less worthwhile."

"Even the NRC has said... they're sure they'll find more errors" if such a review is implemented.

The hearings, held in Avila Beach, were open to the public and the turnout, Culver said, "was quite large every day."

"But the newspapers we asked to come seemed to think they had already covered the story when they attended the blockade in September. The role of the press is very important in making the story visible to the public and in turn putting pressure on the NRC. But the coverage (of the hearings) was weak."

Attorneys for NRC, Mothers for Peace, Pacific Gas and Electric Company, and Governor Brown will file briefs within 40 days, according to Culver. The NRC, then, will go over all of the records and decide whether the full power operating license should be granted.

"There's no question what the outcome will be," Culver admits. "The NRC is absolutely committed to licensing nuclear plants, no matter what."

(Continued from front page) success in enacting many recent major bills into law. Such bills include the stiffening of penalties for drunk drivers and tax credits for installation of solar devices in homes and businesses.

One of the most pressing issues for California in the 1980's, he said, is the performance of government rather than the size of government, which seems to be the center of debate in Sacramento now.

"My priorities as a state senator will be to work for a more efficient and effective operation of our public schools, our transportation and health and welfare systems; to encourage job opportunities and provide a more equitable tax system," Hart said.

Increased university fees and the possible implementation of tuition is also of concern to the candidate.

"Higher education is an investment in the future and we must do as much as possible to avoid tuition. During this time of fiscal cutbacks it is going to be very hard to keep from cutting some university monies but I plan to do all I can to keep higher education open to all students."

In order to avoid future tuition charges Hart suggested split roll revenue increases, to generate monies from the corporate sector, as well as increased liquor and cigarette taxes.

Hart has served as California state assemblyman since 1974 prior to which he won the democratic nomination for Congress in the old 13th District and was appointed to serve on the Regional Coastal Commission. He is currently chair of the Assembly Ways and Means and Education Committees and serves on the Assembly Judiciary Committee.

(Continued from front page) has been taken, the new district will be responsible for all costs pertaining to the seawall project. "The district will repay the pocket cost, but not the office labor," Wallace said. In its early stages, 55 percent of the land owners signed a petition indicating they wished to form a district and take on the responsibility of dealing with the construction of the seawall. But, according to Wallace, "It is a very amorphous group." The greatest percentage of owners live outside of the county and have therefore not been in attendance in any of the hearings or meetings

Flame

(Continued from p.3) brotherhood... or we will be forced to perish as fools." Despite the calls for enlightenment of man and peace through "a glow from that fire," the flame will probably not offer any physical radiation in the near future. Shoon said he understands the reasons for not lighting the flame, and noted that conservation is an important concept in campus planning. "I think that because of the energy crunch it (the fact that the flame remains unlit) is legitimate," Shoon said. However, he added that "they could put a squirt of water," through the flame, in order to form a fountain of water. "That would be just as good." Yet, the prospects for having the fountain lit appear grim, because anything that doesn't have to do with a necessary project, or instructional projects, has been discontinued, because of energy and water conservation.

concerning the issue. The spokespersons for the seawall who attended yesterday's meeting were some of those who actually reside on property along Del Playa. Their general consensus was that they would like to see the eventual construction of the wall, but they did not want to be responsible for all the funds needed to undertake such a project. According to Wallace, it was the opinion of the owners present that the county should take some of the responsibility for the total cost of the project, rather than requiring the proponents to bear the entire burden.

Board of Supervisors' Operation...

(Continued from front page) ministrative Officer's primary role is in the final planning and managing of the county budget. "In round figures, the budget is approximately 300,000 dollars for all costs of the Board of Supervisors, and the county budget is about $130 million," Parrish said. In addition to the numerous departments, issues are studied and researched by other means as well. "They (the Board of Supervisors) have commissions, boards, and committees aplenty, but with regard to departmental levels they send the matters to the individual departments," Parrish said. Matters only come before the actual board once they have been carefully researched and are in the actionary phase. In order for an issue to be placed on the board's agenda, it must be an issue currently in action. Otherwise, the board refers the matter to either the individual department or to a specific committee. Once the background has been researched and the nature of the topic discerned, the Supervisors confront the issue after Parrish has screened it for the agenda. "My office screens the agenda, not to keep things off, but to make sure that things which go before the board are in action," Parrish said. One manner of having a topic placed upon the agenda is through a letter to the board. "The agenda is not the best way to communicate with the Board of Supervisors. It may in fact delay things for them (corresponders, and the board too) if background has not been done," Parrish stated. All clerical and legal matters are performed by the clerk of the board. This part of the county government has no participation in the making of any decisions, but instead has the task of keeping track of the actions of the Board of Supervisors. "They physically put together the agenda; they physically put together the minutes; they are not decision makers," Parrish said.

Women's Advisory Group To Hold Meeting Today

The Chancellor's Advisory Committee on the Status of Women (CACSW) will sponsor the fourth general meeting of campus organizations and individuals concerned with women's issues today at 3 p.m. at the Women's Center.

The committee was established with the charge of acting in an "advisory capacity to the chancellor on all policies, practices, programs and activities affecting women in the university community."

Co-chairperson Chris Allen Clark of sociology said that the committee's current emphasis is three-fold — first, to represent the concerns of women at UCSB; second, to provide the chancellor with a comprehensive view of these concerns, and, third, to serve as liaison between all groups dealing with issues of concern to women and the chancellor via the coordinating commission meetings. In addition to today's meeting, there will be one during spring quarter.

The purpose of the meeting specifically will be to discuss current goals and objectives of CACSW and to gather input from attendees on their appropriateness. Suggestions on how to accomplish them also will be solicited.

Clark said that the committee has defined the following goals and objectives for the year:

- To provide a forum for groups concerned with women's issues.

- To raise campus and community awareness of women's needs, concerns and issues.

- To support and monitor affirmative action programs and Title IX compliance.

- To foster and develop support for child care programs serving students, faculty and staff.

- To support development and improvement of programs for women's safety.

- To provide on-going support for the Women's Center.

Clark asked people interested in more information about the meeting to contact her at ext. 2085.

Mitra, Pursell AAAS Fellows

Two faculty members have been elected fellows of the American Association for the Advancement of Science (AAAS), the country's largest general scientific organization. They are Sanjit K. Mitra, professor and chairperson of electrical and computer engineering, and Carroll W. Pursell, Jr., professor of history.

A fellow of AAAS is described as "a member whose efforts on behalf of the advancement of science or its applications are scientifically or socially distinguished."

Mitra, recognized for his scholarship and research in the analog and digital signal processing areas, has been at UCSB since 1977 and chairperson of the department of electrical and computer engineering since 1979. He came to Santa Barbara after 10 years on the electrical engineering faculty at U.C. Davis.

Mitra, who received a Ph.D. in electrical engineering in 1962 from U.C. Berkeley, has published more than 150 papers and five books, two of which have been translated into Polish and Russian. During his career, he has received a number of research grants, principally from the National Science Foundation.

A native of India, Mitra has been active in the affairs of the Institute of Electrical and Electronics Engineers, serving in various capacities.

Pursell, a scholar in the history of American technology, has been particularly interested in government science policy and the politics of science. Concurrent with this interest, he is considered an authority on the relationship between the federal government and American science and has testified on this area before legislative committees.

The UCSB historian also has been interested in the emerging area of appropriate technology and currently is chairperson of the advisory committee for the University of California Appropriate Technology Program. He has been author or editor of several publications.

Pursell, who received a Ph.D. in history in 1962 from U.C. Berkeley, has had research funded by a number of agencies.

Nostalgia Makes Dancing Big Biz

The nostalgia business is booming on Broadway — and because dance is so essential to recreating other times and places, the choreographer's name is now as big as the title of the show.

In one recent season, there were the dances of Offenbach's Paris in Can Can and turn-of-the-century Americana in Tintypes. There were fan dances in Sugar Babies, variations on the Charleston and the lindy hop in Five O'Clock Girl, complicated tap routines in 42nd Street, and the Cotton Club swing of the 1940s in Sophisticated Ladies.

"A remembrance is not the same as a carbon copy of the past event. Remember that nostalgia is the past seen through rose colored glasses," says Frank W. D. Ries, assistant professor of dance. "The trick — or the art — is balancing the elements to make the total picture look right."

In the face of the nostalgia craze, which Ries dates back to the 1972 revival of No, No Nanette, choreographers have turned for inspiration to dance manuals, old films, veteran performers and other forms of source material including scholarship and research as they are being called upon to recreate practically every era in this century.

In an article in Dancemagazine, Ries describes the requirements and demands made on show dancers and choreographers today and analyzes the way dance is used and misused in the pursuit of a hit musical.

Choreographers must be familiar with periods and styles and be able to telegraph this quickly to a cast under the pressure of four to six weeks of rehearsals. And dancers must be more versatile and better trained than ever, prepared to do tap,

Joyce Eulogy By Mercier Set for Today

The 100th anniversary of the birth of Irish writer James Joyce (1882-1941) will be observed on campus today, when Vivian Mercier, professor of English, delivers a brief eulogy at 3 p.m. in 1004 Girvetz Hall.

Mercier, himself a Dubliner and an authority on Anglo-Irish literature, will also present a lecture entitled "A Key to James Joyce's Ulysses?"

Mercier notes that Joyce always celebrated his birthday with enthusiasm and arranged to have his major works published on that day: Ulysses on Feb. 2, 1922, and Finnegan's Wake 17 years later.

Mercier's lecture will be the first of three this quarter dealing with Joyce. Robert Martin Adams, professor of English at UCLA and author of three books on Joyce, will present the second on Tuesday, Feb. 16, in 1004 Girvetz Hall. His subject will be "The Art of Enigma: James Joyce and Hieronymus Bosch."

The third lecture, not previously announced, will be given at 4 p.m. on Wednesday, March 3, in 1432 South Hall by Stanley Weintraub of the Institute for the Arts and Humanistic Studies at Penn State.

All of the lectures are being sponsored by the department of English and Arts & Lectures.

Art Works in Math

The works of Russian emigrant Alex Shagin, graphic artist, oil painter and medal designer, are on display through March 5 in the mathematics department, 6631 South Hall, from 8:30 a.m. to 4:30 p.m. weekdays.

Robert S. Michaelsen has asked to be relieved of his administrative position as the vice chancellor at UCSB some time in the coming months. Michaelsen was appointed acting vice chancellor of academic affairs in 1978 and promoted in 1979 to the then new position of the vice chancellor, the second ranking campus administrative post.

Chancellor Huttenback announced Michaelsen's intention to resign "as soon as a replacement has been appointed and an appropriate transition can be effected."

Huttenback said that he will appoint a search committee in the near future to find a suitable replacement for Michaelsen. The search will be limited to the University of California.

In his announcement, Huttenback said, "Dr. Michaelsen is a dedicated scholar and teacher, and his expressed desire to return full time to these activities is in his case no euphemism." Michaelsen is a professor of religious studies and a distinguished scholar of religion.

Michaelsen came to UCSB in 1965 from the State University of Iowa, Iowa City, where he had served as administrative director of the school of religion. He was chairperson of the UCSB department of religious studies during 1965-71 and has been active in the affairs of the Academic Senate.

Spatial Aptitude Subject Of Navy-Funded Project

James Pellegrino of the Graduate School of Education has been awarded a grant of $195,138 for research designed to help the U.S. Navy in the screening, assignment and training of recruits.

The Navy trains large numbers of people, many of them unskilled, for jobs in high technology areas such as navigation and advanced weaponry. So it has a high degree of interest in identifying people who can master these jobs and in adapting its instructional materials to the different ways people learn.

Pellegrino's three-year grant from the Office of Naval Research is for research into the components of spatial aptitude and expertise.

"Spatial relationships or abilities are not frequently assessed on most standardized intelligence tests," Pellegrino says. "Yet they are highly correlated with success in practical skills areas such as piloting, engineering, mechanics, even dentistry."

Just a score on an aptitude or intelligence test doesn't tell you much anyway, he says. It may tell you whether someone is high on verbal abilities or on spatial abilities, but it doesn't really tell you what is involved in being highly verbal or highly spatial.

His latest project grows out of previous research on individual differences in cognitive abilities, specifically inductive reasoning. This early interest led him to examine standardized tests, determine what skills are involved in answering the questions, and look at the characteristic reasoning processes of those who do well or poorly at them.

In examining test-taking third and fifth graders and high school students, he found that grade level is less important than skills in reasoning when it comes to succeeding at the tasks given on tests.

Corle Deadline Is April 14

The 1982 Edwin Corle memorial book collection contest is now open to all regularly enrolled UCSB undergraduate and graduate students. A total of $1,000 in awards will be presented to the winners in this 19th annual contest, sponsored through the library by Mrs. Jean Corle in memory of her husband.

The contest is for students who have private book collections representing a well-defined field of interest of the collector's choice.

Each contestant submits an annotated bibliography and a short essay describing how and why the collection was assembled. Entries should be submitted to Christian Brun, contest chairman, department of special collections, UCSB library, by April 14.

Nostalgia's popularity on Broadway has people going to every conceivable source trying to recreate practically every era in this century — and accompanying dance steps.

work is "far above the artless hoofing style Ruby Keeler pounded away at in those Warner Brothers films."

If the scenario or "book" on which the musical is based is not handled carefully, he cautions, no amount of dancing and no number of well-remembered steps are going to guarantee success. Theatrical liberty can harm a show if it is taken too far, if there is a misinterpretation of the music, or if the period is stretched and reworked so much that it loses its shape.

"While dance is an important component on Broadway today, the successful musical always will be a blend of many ingredients," he concludes. "Dance — and history — must be used carefully."

Protestors Arrested At Livermore

Those arrested included peace activist Daniel Ellsberg and eight juveniles.

Officers from the Alameda County Sheriff's department and the U.C. police department physically removed the protesters from the pathways, strapped their hands behind their backs with plastic ties, and put them on vans and buses headed for the Santa Rita jail.

Some of those arrested had to be dragged or carried. Others walked to the vans with the arresting authorities. They were booked on charges of blocking a thoroughfare, which is a misdemeanor and carries a maximum sentence of six months in jail or a $500 fine. The laboratory's pedestrian entrance gates were also manned by supporters who distributed leaflets explaining the purpose of the demonstration.

About 100 laboratory employees watched the demonstration from inside the entrance gates. One accounting department employee termed the protest "ridiculous" and said she wanted the nation to be prepared for any nuclear conflict.

The demonstrators, who included Dominican priests and Buddhist monks, called for conversion of the laboratory's work from nuclear weapons research to energy research.

Jude Siciliano, a Dominican priest from the Graduate Theological Union in Berkeley, said his participation was supported by his superiors in the Catholic Church, which has taken a stance against the proliferation of nuclear arms.

Jack Saunders, a laboratory spokesman, said officials there viewed the protest as a "legitimate expression of these people's opinions" and one of "two schools of thought of how to prevent nuclear war."

"There is a sadness in all of this. These people fear the effects of a nuclear war and they're trying to prevent it, and the people at the Lawrence Livermore Lab fear the effects of a nuclear war and they're trying to prevent it," Saunders said.

Laurie Grossman, a spokeswoman for the Livermore Action Group, said the protest was the first of a series of "major protests" to be directed at the laboratory.

Committees . . .

After lengthy discussion, headway was also made on the third proposal of the bill which concerns realigning committees to include student chairs.

It was agreed to discuss in the future allowing student chairs on committees where a student might be as skilled as a staff or faculty member.

Assistant Chancellor of Budget and Administrative Operations Roger Horton pointed out, "Some committees are closed to student chairs because some require faculty with specific requirements." A final point to be discussed in the future concerns having administrative advisors with an expertise in the committee available to help student chairs.

A.S. Internal Vice President John Ferriter said "Our goal is to achieve an open process so that anyone qualified can chair whether it be staff, faculty or student."

Although nothing was firmly established on paper, Representative Steve Laden said optimistically, "We have something to build on."

Voicing the same opinion, A.S. Internal Vice President John Ferriter said, "Now they know we are serious, and we had a lot of input."

Gold Medal Gus No.2

The word competitive is a key to understanding UCSB's freshman tennis player Gus Anderson. He is from Salinas, California, and does not know what "quitting" means.

Head Coach Bill Detrich feels Anderson is a very valuable addition to the 1982 tennis squad. "Gus is the most intense competitor I've ever seen. He is very consistent and plays with very few errors," Detrich remarked.

Anderson is currently the number two man on the team, playing behind senior Larry Barnett in singles. He recently defeated Craig Venter of UCLA, the team ranked number one in the country.

He first became interested in tennis around 11 years of age, when he played with his father for recreation. He went on to play tennis, golf, and basketball in high school, but because he didn't get much playing time on the court, he put most of his effort in tennis.

"I did pretty well in my first year, winning three satellite tournaments," he said. "During my senior year I advanced to the championships, and came out with a ranking of number two in Northern California, number 24 in the nation in boys 18, and number one in Northern California doubles."

He compiled a record of 105-5 at Salinas High, and went undefeated in his senior season when he was crowned with the Central Coast CIF title.

Over the past summer, he was the gold medal winner at the National Sports Festival. "That was one of my best matches. I was not heavily recruited by the big schools because they were through looking when I started to play well. Coach Detrich is from my home town, and so I talked to him about coming here. He is building an excellent tennis program. My final decision was between San Jose State and here. I came here for academic reasons and climate, as well as the program.

"I find one of the most difficult problems here is dealing with both the academic load and the tennis; I believe you can't put 100 percent into both, so you have to compromise," he continued.

Anderson is a speech and hearing major with a coaching minor. He considered turning pro instead of school, but decided to get the match experience in college. This decision seems to be paying off well already.

"I'm a backcourt player, putting emphasis on endurance tennis. Coach Detrich has already given me some tips on improving both my serve and volley, both very important to the all-around tennis game."

Anderson lives by the basic rule of giving 100 percent all the time. "I always try the best that I can in everything I do. I am only satisfied with giving it my best shot."

Though talented and extremely determined, he is very soft spoken, perhaps even shy. He plays his game with quiet determination, and does not like emotional outbursts that are common to a tennis court.

He considers his strong points to be his endurance game and his topspin, feeling that he should work on his serve and volley more.

As for the future, he wants to obtain his degree. He hopes to go on tour in Europe this summer, which depends on how he does this year.

All-Stars And Tradition

In a further development of anti-climacticism after another less than exciting Super Sunday, All-Star Sunday made its debut last weekend, giving the helpless television viewer a last glimpse of their gridiron heroes before their six month respite (God, what will I do on Sundays?).

That was only one part of All-Star Sunday, however, we were treated to another meaningless exercise, the NBA All-Star game. Both games were decent, but for what's at stake and for the lack of tradition backing these money making ventures, it might not be worth it. The NBA and NFL have simply not been able to match the spectacle and prestige of major league baseball's All-Star game, an American institution since 1937. People remember Carl Hubbel striking out seven Hall of Famers in a row, Reggie Jackson hitting a mammoth home run in Tiger Stadium, and perhaps the most memorable moment in the game's illustrious history, Pete Rose bowling over Ray Fosse to give the National League the victory (as usual) in the 1970 All-Star game.

Who's going to remember Nick Lowery's field goal for the AFC? Or Larry Bird's dominant play in the NBA game?

Tradition is the key here and the consistent appearances of familiar names. Basketball and football, with the exception of a few cases, don't allow for the identities of their stars to become implanted in the minds of the American sports fan. It's the nature of the two games. Considering that the average career span of an NFL running back is now two and a half years, and that the average life of a man on an NBA roster is now five years, no wonder people lose touch with the All-Star games that are supposed to showcase their favorite players. Building up a persona takes time, and baseball allows for the maturation of one. Certain players make the All-Star game year after year, giving the game a sense of continuity and stability. I can't imagine an All-Star game without Pete Rose or even Steve Garvey, but I wouldn't blink an eye if Tony Dorsett was left off the Pro Bowl roster, or if Kareem Abdul Jabbar was snubbed by Moses Malone on the Western Conference squad.

The Pro Bowl has now found a permanent profit yielding home for its game, Honolulu, where they'll watch anything that involves pigskin. They may fill the stadium in football starved Hawaii, but it isn't going to do much for generating interest on the continent. The NBA has continued its All-Star game as a traveling circus, this time from East Rutherford, New Jersey.

Of course, baseball moves its game around and could also be called a circus, but it's a circus with tradition.

Gauchos Are Perfect In The Season Opener, 9-1

By GARY MIGDOL
Nexus Sports Writer

If there was a perfect way to start a season, the UCSB baseball team showed everyone how it can be done. The Gauchos, behind the strong pitching of junior Steve French and a solid 15-hit attack, easily defeated St. Mary's College 9-1, Monday at the Campus Diamond.

UCSB jumped on the Gaels' pitching for three first inning runs and four more in the third as St. Mary's found itself out of a game they never were in.

The Gauchos scored three times in the first inning as Steve Clark led off with a single, Dan Reedy walked and Joe Redfield followed with a towering double that scored Clark. A passed ball allowed Reedy to score and the Gauchos were up 2-0.

Paul Smith struck out, but the ball got away from the Gael catcher and Smith wound up on first. With two runners on base, Gaucho left fielder George Page lined a single to center as both Redfield and Smith scored.

"I was obviously pleased with the outcome," an anxious Al Ferrer said. "Our defense was good and the enthusiasm was there. I was especially pleased with Redfield. The only area I was displeased with was our running game. We made some mistakes we shouldn't have."

French, who was making his debut as a Gaucho, was also pitching for the first time on the Division I level. And he rose to the occasion as he set down St. Mary's with relative ease. In eight innings, he allowed just one run on three hits while fanning six Gaels. French seemed to get stronger as the game moved in to the late innings. He retired the last 10 batters he faced before Mike Fulmer came on in relief to pitch the ninth inning.

U.C. Santa Barbara tallied three times in the third inning after four consecutive

This type of tour will tell him how he can do in pro ranking, as he will pick up Association of Tennis Professionals points rather than cash. By the end of summer he hopes to be ranked in the top 200 of the world. He has definite tennis plans for the more distant future, among them turning pro. The when depends largely upon this summer.

About the upcoming season, both Detrich and Anderson feel that winning the PCAA conference is very possible. Detrich said, "Gus is a blue chip addition to our team, and should help a great deal in our quest for the PCAA championship."

The Gauchos stole four bases and had eight walks to go along with a 15-hit attack that never gave the Gael pitchers much time to rest. Clark had three singles, Hill was two for two with three walks, Page was two for four with three runs batted in and Ferraro was two for three including a two-run double to put UCSB ahead 9-1.

The Gauchos leave for Arizona today and play Arizona State tomorrow and Thursday before playing the University of Arizona on Friday and a doubleheader on Saturday.
