20 Percent of Students Take Part In Final Vote For A.S. President

By Dylan Callaghan
Staff Writer

Michael D. Chester defeated James Siojo to become the 1990-91 Associated Students president, surpassing his opponent by an 18 percent margin of victory in the A.S. run-off elections held Tuesday and Wednesday.

Approximately 20 percent of undergraduates participated in the two-day vote, in which Chester garnered 1,820 votes to Siojo's 1,270.

Announcement of Chester's victory came amidst cheers and roses at the Wednesday night A.S. Legislative Council meeting.

"I'm happy I get a chance to finally make something happen.... This is good," said an ecstatic Chester, moments after the announcement.

Then, with a conciliatory handshake, Siojo, who as current internal vice president was presiding over the council meeting, told Chester he would provide "any help you need" in the upcoming year.

Most urgent on Chester's agenda is to attack Chancellor Barbara S. Uehling's call for a summer vote on the California Public Interest Research Group funding system, he said. "It's typical of the administration to bypass what the students want ... but that time is long past gone," Chester said. "We need to start by negotiating with the chancellor ... and let her know the students want (the current CalPIRG fee system) and for her not to mess with it. It's not her decision."

Nearly 75 percent of student voters in the April 24-25 General Elections opted to retain the system.

Health Center Imposes $15 Fee Upon Students

Committee Budget Forced to Raise Fall Fees

By Jennifer Ogar
Staff Writer

Rising health care costs and a lack of alternative funding prompted the Student Health Advisory Committee to unanimously approve a $15 quarterly fee for use of the Student Health Service effective Fall Quarter 1990 at their meeting Wednesday.

Students will be charged $15 upon their first visit to the center if they are using specialized services such as optometry and dental care — which have previously required a direct fee. Any subsequent visits throughout that quarter will be free of charge, explained SHS Director Dr. John Baumann.

Imposing any fee on the students to increase revenue, "is not what any of us want," Baumann said, "but I'm in the position to implement it." He added that a hike in student fees is the only way to raise enough revenue to cover the center's costs.

SHS' current $3.5 million annual budget — $2,400,000 of which comes from student registration fees — cannot feasibly cover a deficit that has accumulated over the last few years, according to Vice Chancellor for Student Affairs Michael Young. The deficit is expected to reach $202,000 by the end of this academic year, Young said.

GSA Government Election Held, Marquez Replaces Lutz as Pres.

UCSB Admits 205 Students Over Quotas, Report States

By Laura Pitter
Staff Writer

Despite stringent admission limitations on incoming students during the 1989-90 Winter and Spring Quarters, UCSB slightly overshot its 1989-90 enrollment goal of 18,259 by 205 students.

Average graduate and undergraduate enrollment for Fall, Winter, and Spring Quarters is 18,464, .12 percent beyond target. UCSB's goal was to bring the three quarter average to within one percent of 18,259 students. The goal was set after administrators discovered the campus had exceeded its 1989 Fall Quarter goal by 477 students, by enrolling 19,082 people.

The Spring Quarter enrollment report showed a population reduction between Fall and Spring Quarters '89-90 from 19,082 to 17,809 students.

"I think everyone is happy about the report," Director of Admissions Bill Villa said. "It was very, very difficult for the staff, we had to say no to a large number of people."

To meet the target level, the number of transfers and freshman admitted for the current Spring

Pro-independence Laws to Be Forgone by Lithuanians

MOSCOW (AP) — Lithuania's president said Wednesday his Baltic republic would consider suspending temporarily some of the pro-independence laws that drove the Kremlin to impose an economic embargo two weeks ago.

President Vytautas Landsbergis agreed to the step in a letter to French and West German leaders who last week proposed that such a compromise would help start negotiations between the republic and Moscow.

"Everything is negotiable which does not question the matter of restored independence of the Lithuanian state on March 11, 1990," Landsbergis said in his letter to French president Francois Mitterland and West German Chancellor Helmut Kohl.

The letter was read to Lithuania's parliament, the Supreme Council, which gave its approval without a vote, said Aidas Palubinskas, a spokesperson for the parliament.

"Putting our confidence in France and the Federal Republic of Germany, as well as in other Western democracies, and in their support of Lithuanian democracy, we are asking you to transmit to the Soviet authorities our consent to consider a temporary suspension of the effects of the decisions taken by the sovereign parliament of the Lithuanian Republic that could trouble the Soviet authorities," Landsbergis wrote.

Recently Released Hostage 'Very Angry' Few Remain

WIESBADEN, West Germany (AP) — Former U.S. hostage Frank Reed revealed Wednesday he was held for months with two other American captives in Lebanon and said he was angry and embarrassed that they have not been freed.

Reed, who was released Monday after 42 months in captivity, said he also was held with two British hostages. Reed was flown Tuesday to Wiesbaden for a battery of medical exams and questioning at the U.S. Air Force Hospital.

"I have not seen Tom and Terry for a while and I don't know where they are," Reed said, referring to Terry Anderson, The Associated Press chief Middle East Correspondent, and Thomas Sutherland, an American educator.

"For God's sake, it's nearly the sixth year for these men. I'm absolutely embarrassed I'm out before they are."

Reed, in his first comments to reporters since arriving in Wiesbaden, said he spent "the good part of two years with Tom and Terry."

Anderson, the longest-held Western hostage in Lebanon, was kidnapped on March 16, 1985. Sutherland was seized June 9, 1985.

Correction

Due to an editing error, the front page story in Wednesday's Nexus about the California Public Interest Research group incorrectly stated that the results of the new summer mail ballot would be implemented for Fall Quarter 1990. However, the refundable/refundable collection method will be used in fall and the results of the summer ballot will first take effect in winter. The Nexus regrets this error.

Clarification

A feature story in Tuesday's Nexus incorrectly described Regina Wells and Donnell Dixon as janitors. Their proper job title is custodian, and they were not "taking a break," as the article stated, but simply posing for a photographer.

Senate Budget Panel Adds To House Defense Slashing

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Democrat-controlled Senate Budget Committee on Wednesday made the deepest cut yet in proposed Pentagon spending, approving a 1991 budget that pares President Bush's military plans by $9.9 billion.

The panel adopted the $1.2 trillion spending plan, which says it will reduce next year's deficit by $43 billion, on a 14-9 vote. Sen. Charles Grassley of Iowa was the only Republican to join the committee Democrats in voting for the package.

Committee Chairman James Sasser, D-Tenn., who pieced together the proposal, called it "a clear and clarion call to the White House to get behind some real deficit reduction."

Bush's budget seeks $36 billion in deficit reduction.

Sasser said his package could serve as a benchmark should negotiations be held this year between the White House and congressional leaders. Democrats are split over whether there is a need for formal budget talks with Bush, while Republicans argue such bargaining is a necessity.

The administration and congressional Democrats have been dueling all year over how Pentagon spending should be adjusted as a result of political changes in Eastern Europe. The White House has urged a cautious approach, while Democrats are eager to use some military dollars for social programs and to reduce the deficit.

Congress Panels Forward Environmental Farm Bill

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Senate Agriculture Committee approved conservation provisions for the 1990 farm bill Wednesday that would expand government agricultural programs designed to protect the environment.

At the same time, the House Agriculture Committee approved a peanut program that leaves the present support system virtually unchanged.

The House committee also voted to require the Agriculture Department to study whether enough fruits and vegetables are being grown in the United States to meet demand.

And the chair of the House committee announced he has established a special task force to devise a commodities support system that meets deficit reduction requirements.

"In 1985, Congress established a policy that farm programs should be consistent with, and not undermine our nation's environmental objectives," said Sen. Patrick Leahy, D-Vt., chair of the Senate committee, as his panel took up the conservation section of the 1990 bill.

WASHINGTON (AP) — Despite ballyhooed efforts at education reform, student achievement is continuing a decline that began three years ago, the government said Wednesday in a controversial report.

Education Secretary Lauro Cavazos said the annual state-by-state performance chart, popularly called the all chart, makes it clear that, as a nation, we are still not seriously committed to improving education for all Americans.

The chart showed the California graduation rate declined slightly to 65.9 percent in 1988, compared to 66.1 percent in 1987 — putting California below the national average both years. The California average score on the Scholastic Aptitude Test was 906 in 1989, down from 908 the previous year. The national average on the SAT in 1989 was 903.

STATE

Government-backed Health Insurance Program Shown

SACRAMENTO (AP) — A sweeping, multibillion-dollar plan to make government-backed health insurance available to all Californians was unveiled Wednesday. It would be financed partly by an increase of up to 1 percent in the state sales tax and a hike in employers' payroll tax.

The proposal, which could cost the state an estimated $50 billion annually and virtually supplant the existing health care delivery system, would include coverage for the estimated 6 million Californians, students, the homeless, the unemployed and the elderly, who currently have no health insurance.

The measure by Sen. Nicholas Petris, D-Oakland, is one of the several rival bills pending through the Legislature, but by far is the most comprehensive and potentially the most costly. The others include proposals by Assembly Speaker Willie Brown, D-San Francisco, and Senate Minority leader Ken Maddy of Resno, both of which are aimed at providing basic health insurance for low-wage workers.

L.A. Mayor Bradley Asks For Mandatory Water Law

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Mayor Tom Bradley on Wednesday proposed mandatory conservation measures requiring all water customers to cut use by 10 percent in 1986 levels to cope with California's worsening drought.

The state is experiencing its fourth consecutive drought year and "the situation is serious," Bradley told a City Hall news conference.

The regional Metropolitan Water District, which provides about half the water needed by 15 million people in Southern California, has forecast a 10 percent shortfall in its supplies this summer.

"We have had in effect since 1988 a voluntary water conservation program," Bradley said, and there is now "a need to step that up."

The city's Department of Water and Power, which is getting 60 percent of its water supply from MWD this year, services 3.4 million residents.

Although the measures proposed by Bradley are the most restrictive rules imposed since the state's record drought of 1977, they pale in comparison to Santa Barbara, where officials are trying to cut water use by 45 percent.

In a letter to the City Council, Bradley sought changes in a 1977 drought ordinance that set out five increasingly stringent steps for conservation.

Nation of Islam Follower Pleads Innocent to Charge

TORRANCE (AP) — A Nation of Islam member charged with assaulting a sheriff's deputy during a street melee in which a fellow Muslim was killed pleaded innocent Wednesday, court officials said.

Charles Hartley, 18, was wounded by gunfire during the January confrontation between Nation of Islam members and two Los Angeles County sheriff's deputies. Both deputies had guns taken from them during the struggle.

Hartley faces trial on charges of assaulting a law officer, removing an officer's gun and resisting arrest.

Killed in the Jan. 23 melee was Oliver Beasley, 27. During Hartley's preliminary hearing, sheriff's Deputy William Tackaberry testified that he ordered rookie trainee Deputy David Dolson to kill Beasley as they fought over his gun.

Dolson, who earlier shot Hartley when he heard his partner's gun fire during the struggle, said he followed Tackaberry's order and shot Beasley in the head.

The shooting incident erupted after deputies stopped Hartley and a companion for investigation of speeding.

Bowes Appointed as La Cumbre Editor

By Eileen Chung
Staff Writer

Sophomore Vikki Bowes, a history major, has been selected as the 1990-91 editor in chief of UCSB's yearbook, La Cumbre, the largest college annual in the Western United States.

With two years of La Cumbre experience under her belt, Bowes feels that she has her goals set and looks forward to meeting the demands of the job, including the late nights during deadlines.

Bowes will replace 1989-90 Editor in Chief Gina Baldassare. "Gina was motivational this year. I saw how hard she worked. She was the reason I took the job," Bowes said.

Bowes was selected April 12, from three editor in chief applicants, by a six-member board made up of two professional journalists and former La Cumbre editors and students, explained Communications Director Joe Kovach. "Vikki is very qualified for the job. She has outstanding ideas and will do an outstanding job," Kovach said.

Bowes, who will receive a $6,000 annual salary as editor, had already begun her job the night she was notified of her selection. "I went out there to recruit yearbook people, trying to get a staff together," she said.

"I want to get the staff more unified so that we will be better working together and more of a family type," she said.

The responsibilities of her new position will include organizational work, such as planning, reading copy, looking over articles and "keeping things in order," Bowes said.

The challenge in putting out a college yearbook is making sure all groups on campus are represented Bowes said. "It will be great if we get a diverse staff — that will help."

Revisions Bowes plans to make will include cutting the number of pages in the next yearbook from 700 to 600. "We need to do this so we can improve the quality of it," she said.

The 1988-89 La Cumbre recently won four national awards from Columbia University for outstanding photography, opening sections, theme selection and page design.

Hailing from Dana Point in Orange County, Bowes hopes to pursue a teaching career in elementary or high school after graduating from UCSB.

POLICE REPORT

Sexual Assault

A 23-year-old UCSB student was sexually assaulted by three unidentified men on April 28, near 6685 Trigo Rd., according to police records.

The victim told police she watched a performance by her boyfriend's band from a neighboring balcony, and spoke with several men who were on the balcony with her. When the woman began to climb down from the balcony, she was allegedly attacked and dragged to a different location. She could not determine exactly where the men took her, as they covered her face and mouth with their hands.

The suspects then reportedly fondled the victim and masturbated in front of her while one of the suspects prevented her escape. The woman reportedly kicked one of the suspects, kneed another and fled the scene. She was not raped, but told police she was afraid she would have been had she not escaped, according to police records.

No arrests were made in the case.

Burglars Galore

Burglars made off with $3,101 worth of Isla Vista residents' personal property during the past week, according to police records.

Burglars took, among other things: cash, stereos, wallets, purses, and video cassette recorders. Police records show a total of eight reported burglaries, both auto and residential.

Blazing Blowtorch!

Firefighters extinguished a small fire in the laundry room of an Isla Vista apartment complex Tuesday night. The fire filled the attic area of the apartment complex with smoke.

"The fire apparently was caused by a plumber's torch," said Captain Charlie Johnson, public relations officer for the Santa Barbara County Fire Department. Johnson said the blaze, which was accidental, probably resulted when a plumber, who was installing a water meter on the washing machine, contacted a nearby wood structure with the flame from a blowtorch he was using. The wood apparently smoldered for some time, erupting into a blaze just before 8 p.m., Johnson said.

Wes Herman, Captain of Station 17, estimated the damage to the laundry room at $1,200. There was no other damage to the tenants' property, he said.

Whistle Blowing Policy To Improve Protection For Employees of UC

By Tracey Raika
Reporter

In light of UCSB's current Staff Appreciation Week, employees of this campus, and the UC system, might be gladdened that the university has adopted a new policy to make it easier to report wrongdoings in the workplace.

Under a "whistle-blowing" policy recently implemented, UC employees who wish to file a complaint concerning employment practices will have a more efficient reporting procedure and will be better protected, according to university administrators.

The UC Policy and Procedure for Reporting Improper Governmental Activities and Protection Against Retaliation for Reporting Improper Activities, adopted Jan. 1, 1990, was created to improve complaint procedures and protection for employees of the nine UC campuses, according to the UC Office of the President, which devised the policy.

Under the new guidelines, UC employees are specifically discouraged from using their positions to prevent or punish another employee for filing a complaint. "A university employee may not directly or indirectly use or attempt to use the official authority or influence of his or her position or office for the purpose of interfering with the right of a person to file a confidential report alleging improper activity," the document states.

ELECTION: 59% Wins

Although current A.S. President Mike Stowers had strongly campaigned for Siojo, he said "I wish Michael the best of luck." Stowers hopes Chester will continue work on the campus recycling program, campus development, CalPIRG, and the faculty legislature.

Chester sees his victory as a sign that students were unsatisfied with the 1989-90 A.S. administration. "Students wanted a change," he said. "The time has come to make it happen for students ... and I believe I can do it. I hope to be an effective motivator of students and an agitator of the administration."

Karen Bedrosian, a preliminary presidential candidate who supported Chester

"I'm fucking stoked," said Chester supporter Eric Jensen, who was unsuccessful in his bid for internal vice president. "A lot's going to be accomplished." Jensen noted that because many of the newly-elected A.S. representatives have experience they will be able to "hit the ground running."

Siojo expressed satisfaction with the election results — and appreciation that the race is over. "I feel relieved," he said. "Now I can relax ... and I feel strongly about letting the new administration form. He won fair and square ... and I wish him all the luck."

Although only 20 percent of undergraduates turned out for the election, Siojo said "I expected a lower in the run-off election, agreed with Chester's assessment. "I think the best candidate for what (the students need) won. We wanted to see change and I think that's going to happen."

Internal Vice President-elect Rachel Doherty was optimistic of A.S.' future under Chester. "I think he's a great guy," she said. "I'm proud of my work.... We made progress everywhere," said Siojo, adding that he hopes to contribute his knowledge to the new administration as needed.

To the possibility of Siojo's future participation, Chester, who will officially take office May 31, said "I would hope he stays involved ... It's not (like) me to turn people away from A.S."

O'Connell Legislation Seeks To Benefit Dyslexic Students

By Eric Boime
Reporter

Legislation introduced by State Assemblyman Jack O'Connell (D-Santa Barbara) would require the State Board of Education to implement programs to help identify and assist students with dyslexia.

The bill, which recently passed the Assembly Education Committee, would have the Superintendent of Public Instruction develop guidelines to tackle the problem of dyslexia by the beginning of the 1992-93 academic year. The bill, authored by State Assemblyman Jackie Speir (D-San Francisco), is currently on its way to a vote by the Assembly.

Geared to assist students at all levels of instruction, the bill seeks to have the State Board of Education implement programs that provide dyslexic students with special instructional services.

"We are trying to make this a disability that school districts seek out and provide treatment for," O'Connell said. "Many times these students go undetected until late in their academic course work. Early detection is our primary goal," he said.

One in three children in the juvenile courts suffer from learning disabilities, as do three in four children in psychiatric wards, according to Joan Esposito, a dyslexic who has worked extensively with Santa Barbara children who have the condition.

According to the bill, "over one-third of learning-disabled youth dropped out of school during the 1987-88 school year. Numerous studies have revealed a correlation between this high dropout rate and the inappropriate detection and instructional programs available to dyslexic pupils."

Esposito agreed with the bill's allegations. "Testing is inadequate, and the people who administer the tests are not trained," she said, adding that many people do not understand what dyslexia is.

"Dyslexia is a neurological dysfunction that often affects a person's ability to deal with the written language," explained Susan Hamilton, director of Santa Barbara's Center for Educational Therapy. Dyslexics often show difficulty comprehending the sequence of letters and symbols which, accordingly, affects their reading, writing, and mathematical abilities, she said.

Esposito approached O'Connell about two months ago with 26 "devastating" cases concerning dyslexic children from Santa Barbara in order to gain his support, she said. The cases featured children who were identified as dyslexic, but were virtually ignored by public education, she said.

"Regular education and special education teachers in California do not have state program guidelines available to them as a resource to assist them in identifying, assessing, planning, and improving education services to pupils with dyslexia and its related disorders," according to the bill.

"Students with dyslexia suffer from embarrassment, frustration and abuse," Esposito explained. Neglecting these students ultimately leads to other problems, she said.

"All dyslexics have (at least) average intelligence," said Hamilton, "and some are quite bright. I've seen many students get frustrated and upset, experiencing so much failure they give up. Many people view them as lazy, but people don't realize that (many dyslexics) are tired of beating their heads against the wall."

"This bill is very important to us," Esposito said. "If you can't be taught to read, how do you get through life?"

The bill will be heard next in the Assembly Ways Committee, of which O'Connell is a member, before going to the Assembly floor for a vote.

HEALTH: Increase Is Only Option

Without an increase in fees, services offered by SHS — which handles 75,000 patient visits annually — would have to be cut, Baumann said.

Opposition to the fee was muted by the fact that no other viable funding sources have been found, leaving a 'per visit fee' as the only possible option, according to both Young and Baumann.

Patient Advocate Kevin Raskin believes the quarterly $15 fee is better than a per visit charge. Such a charge would require students to pay $3 each visit in order for SHS to meet costs, he said. The $15 quarterly charge is better because it would "make less of an imposition than (other means of funding) have the potential to be," he said.

Young agrees that the quarterly fee would be the best option because "it lowers the actual cost of implementing the fee, it lowers the administrative costs," in that the cost of processing so many transactions for the per visit fee would be eliminated.

"There has to be incremental increases to keep up with the costs, but it is our intent to keep it as low as possible."

Baumann added that the new fee should not negatively affect students who are dependent upon financial aid. "This is the kind of thing that financial aid helps people out with," he said, referring to possible grants or loans that students could apply for to cover medical expenses.

The center received a one-time allocation of $150,000 from Chancellor Barbara S. Uehling's discretionary account in 1987, but Young explained that, as an optional funding source, the chancellor's account "would not solve the problem," because the costs are continually rising. "I don't see that as a real solution," he said.

"What we're facing is the fact that health care is rising at a steady rate, faster than student fees and inflation," Young said. Because the deficit is also increasing, you have to find a funding source that can "pay the old costs and the new every year."

Young expects that the increase in fees will eliminate the deficit within the next two years but that the center's financial problems will not be solved, and "the fee won't go away."

In fact, "the fee will increase at some point, unless the world stops," Young said, because inflation will continue to rise as well. He explained that raising the fee is necessary because "there has to be incremental increases to keep up with the costs, but it is our intent to keep it as low as possible."

EOPS Lacks Necessary State Funding to Facilitate Students

By Judy Tachibana
McClatchy News Service

SACRAMENTO — The number of low-income and educationally disadvantaged students attending California's community colleges is growing and that growth is expected to continue during the next 15 years.

But state funding for a special program — Extended Opportunity Programs and Services — which helps those students, has not been increasing to meet the need.

"We haven't had any growth money in seven years," said Rod Tarrer, coordinator for EOPS for the state community college chancellor's office. "And if you lose (students) from EOPS, you lose them from the colleges."

While 39,000 students were served by EOPS in 1987, about 51,000 are expected to be in need of the services next year, Tarrer said. And that rate of growth will continue, due to immigration to California from other states and countries, birth rates, and people who need classes to meet U.S. permanent-residency requirements under a federal immigration amnesty program, he said.

In California, an estimated 1.9 million people applied for amnesty under the 1986 Immigration Reform and Control Act.

"Even if one-tenth of those in the amnesty programs goes to community colleges and one-tenth of those are EOPS students, you are talking about 17,000 people," Tarrer said.

Bonnie M. Schmiede, a member of the state EOPS Statutory Advisory Committee and former Taft College EOPS coordinator agreed. "You have to look at the type of students we are dealing with," Schmiede said. "They have had failure experience, low self-concepts and self-esteem, not very good academic backgrounds. They can't make it if they don't have somebody to go to."

Vu-Duc Vuong, also a new member of the advisory committee, said EOPS should be the last safety net for the student. "They are deficient academically, socially, financially and psychologically," Vuong said.

Speaking of refugees from war-torn countries, Vuong said that many arrive at community college traumatized. Many have not been in school for years, he added. Without the help from programs like EOPS, they will not make it through college, he said.

To qualify for EOPS assistance, a student must be a resident of California, enrolled full time, low income and educationally disadvantaged.

The program was established by the Legislature in 1969. In its first year of operation, in 1970, it received $2.8 million in state funds to serve 13,000 students at 46 community colleges.

In 1987, it received about $28 million in state funds and served more than 39,000. In 1988, enrollment increased by seven percent to more than 42,000 students, Tarrer said, and estimates for 1989 indicate that 45,000 students were served by the program.

Another 6,000 students eligible for EOPS are expected next year, Tarrer said. "I know there are more students out there than we are serving now."

POLICY: Guidelines Set that Enable Complainants to Report Grievances

However, the policy is not intended to encourage an increase in complaints but rather to ensure complainants that they are not jeopardizing their jobs by coming forward, said David Gonzales, manager of labor and employee relations.

An improper act is defined as going against what is required and defined by law as good practice. These include acts ranging from theft to using office computers for personal use, Vice Chancellor of Administrative Services David Sheldon said.

The policy was created to clarify state whistle-blowing policies concerning employment grievance procedures and how those policies apply to UC employees. The State Legislature's 1981 "Reporting of Improper Governmental Activities Act" was designed to include employees in state departments and agencies, but was unclear about university employees.

The new UC policy specifically applies to UC academic and staff employees, students, applicants for UC employment, and members of the public.

UCSB is currently in the process of developing its own policy that will specify time limits, offices, and who to see for grievance complaints, Gonzales said.

While the Office of the President has stated the new policy will improve grievance procedures, many staff members are unsure whether it will have much impact.

UC Employee Relations Coordinator Margaret Rader favors the policy but admitted, "I don't know what kind of response the

"It won't make much difference until people believe it's safe to blow the whistle."

Geoffrey Wallace
UCSB ombudsman

policy is going to get. At the state level it was kind of ignored."

Just as in the past, if an individual has a grievance involving an improper activity on a UC campus, the problem can be taken to various designated sources such as a supervisor, the ombudsman, the chancellor, the university auditor, or the auditor general.

UCSB Ombudsman Geoffrey Wallace does not believe that the new guidelines will have much impact on their own. "It won't make much difference until people believe it's safe to blow the whistle," he said. "There needs to be a feeling of trust in the system." In addition, the majority of individuals who choose to "blow the whistle" are unsuccessful, Wallace said.

In accordance with the new UC policy and state law, Chancellor Barbara S. Uehling has appointed Sheldon as the campus Retaliation Complaint Officer. As campus RCO, Sheldon is responsible for investigating or overseeing the investigation of complaints filed under the policy.

That new policy is exclusive to problems involving employee relations. Retaliation complaints involving grade-related or other academic matters are not heard under the "whistle-blowing" policy, but under separate policies established by the Academic Senate. However, if a student is also a university employee, complaints about employment-related retaliation can be filed with the RCO.

The complaint must be filed within 12 months of the alleged act of retaliation under existing university procedures. The person may also involve the RCO by filing a copy of the written complaint as well as a sworn statement of truth. The new UC procedures require each campus to prepare an annual report of actions taken under the retaliation protection provisions.

When an individual reports an improper activity, Sheldon investigates the complaint and, if retaliation appears to have occurred, he coordinates the administrative assessment and presents his findings to the chancellor for a decision on the alleged improper activity. "It is helpful to know who's reporting the improper activities so that the decision can be communicated to the complainant," Sheldon explained.

The university will protect the identity of a complainant at his or her request but many administrators hope the policy will promote an environment in which people can voice their grievances without fear.

FIGURES: Goal Missed

Quarter was drastically reduced. For example, in spring 1989, approximately 300 to 350 students were admitted. This year, however, a cap of 150 was put on the admissions department. Of 502 freshman and transfer applicants, 192 were admitted to UCSB. Of those, 147 accepted, according to Villa.

"We set a 3.0 grade limit for incoming transfer students.... We had to deal with a lot of unhappy students and parents, but we had to hold the line," Vice Chancellor of Budget and Planning Robert Kuntz said.

For the first time, a cap was also put on the number of returning students allowed readmittance for both the Winter and Spring Quarters.

Beverly Lewis, associate registrar in charge of readmitting students, was able to stay below her department's target figures of 250 for winter and 125 for spring, without turning any students away, but by strongly discouraging them from enrolling. "We told all of them that they would have to be put on a waiting list, and we could not promise them that they would be admitted. Some withdrew their applications."

Lewis' office admitted 204 students in spring, but technically still met the 125-student cap, because 79 of those admitted had contracts which had to be fulfilled by the university for disciplinary or academic reasons.

The goal was set to allow the university to gradually increase enrollment to 20,000 students over the next 15 years. The 1988-89 target enrollment was 18,119 and the 1990-91 goal will be 18,398.

UCSB planners hope to double the graduate student population to about 4,000.

the candidates were voted into office unanimously.

Marquez will replace Reinhart Lutz, who served two years as GSA external president. "It is a pivotal position. It is necessary for someone to be there now to make the transition from Reinhart more comfortable," Marquez said. Her plans for GSA next year include soliciting more student involvement.

Loedel, the 1989-90 administrative v.p., plans to use his position as internal president to continue the work he has done this year. "I'm looking at issues like child care and health insurance as well as the overall quality of life for graduate students on campus," Loedel said.

"We still have a lot of issues in the fire," Gurevitch echoed.

Concerning all the elected candidates, "I think we have a good team and I wish them well in the coming year," Lutz said.

During the meeting, concerns were raised about the election process, whereby candidates are nominated and voted on during one meeting. Ron Dolin, a graduate student in computer science, argued that the process does not allow time for students to know the issues involved, or anything about the prospective candidates. Dolin advocated a system of balloting instead. "With ballots, people have an option that they don't have if they cannot attend the meeting," he said.

Lutz responded that if students are indeed concerned about the elections, they would show up. "It is not too much to ask that if you want to have a say in the vote, you attend the meeting," he said.

The GSA council approved a motion to look into changing the elections process in the future. The change would require a constitutional amendment.

Manifest Destiny. Monroe Doctrine. Murky's Law. It had to happen. It's the way we do things."
"But what about national sovereignty and the right to self-determination?" I asked, becoming exasperated. "What about democracy?"
"Ha!" The shoeshine boy laughed and tapped his knee. "Son, we support democracy only when democracy supports us. If we really cared about democracy, we wouldn't help overthrow democracies like Chile's and then install brutal dictators like Pinochet."

"And how 'bout Nicaragua?"
"No one seems to remember we didn't care too much about democracy in Nicaragua under the Somoza dictatorship. Even you must know that great quote by Franklin Roosevelt about the first Somoza dictatorship: 'He's a son-of-a-bitch, but at least he's our son-of-a-bitch!' Or something like that. There wasn't democracy in Nicaragua until the Sandinistas took over. The press and everyone else handily forgets about the 1984 Nicaraguan elections. We tried to delegitimize them by telling Arturo Cruz to withdraw, but he later admitted in a New York Times interview to being on the CIA payroll and regretting his decision to drop out of the race."

"But why dominate a whole hemisphere? It sure uses up a lot of our time and energy."
"Business investments. Resources. False security. Promotion of the arms industry. A certain amount of racism. And even paternalism. We've broken numerous international laws—and a bunch of our own, too—to maintain this hegemony. Just look at the Iran/Contra fiasco. Amazing it didn't bring down the government. A hundred times worse than Watergate."
"What's the inside word? Did Reagan and Bush know?" My lips were wet.
"Why don't you go straight to the source? I know the woman who channels for Reagan. She's a fruit seller over in the town of Granada."
"How can that be?" I asked. "Reagan isn't dead yet."

"My mouth froze half open. I caught my breath, then said, 'I didn't think his lips were moving very much the last time I saw him on television....'"
"Hey Zum, I gotta go now. The finals of our team bowling tournament are about to begin. Josef Stalin and Jesus Christ versus Andy Warhol and Harriet Tubman. Gotta root for the underdogs!" The kid smiled and gave me a small wink. "Hey, and one last thing?"
"Yes, Bill?"
"Can you let everyone know that Woodward's book on me was a load of bull?"
"Sure, Bill. And ... uh," I hesitated. "Can I quote you on all of this stuff?"
"Go right ahead. I don't care if anybody gets in trouble because of what I've said. All those dead Bill Casey jokes going around Washington after my death really pissed me off."

Didn't go to work today. Those pussy-pooters!
I went to the store and bought a loaf of french bread, a jug of water, two Twinkies and some saltine crackers, and the check-out lady asked me if I was throwing a party.
Lisa didn't call me again today. It's been about three weeks. Maybe she's been in an accident.
Back when we were freshpeople at UC

Riverside Lisa and I, who were best friends, drank a lot of iced coffee. A guy down the hall named Matt Welch (a different Welch) had a long distance relationship with a girl in Upland, which is about 10 minutes away. They had a fight and he tried to kill himself by eating 75 Dristan tablets.
I remember thinking "what is this guy doing with 75 Dristan in the first place?" The Price Club mentality was really getting out of hand that year. Call them what you like, but to me, the 1980s were really the Price Club decade: too much of the same thing. Too much Mott's apple sauce. Too many plastic things of Gummy Bears. Too many guys named Dean.

Mom called and said that Chuck spoke before the Shriners tonight and that they gave him "one of those things you wrap around your neck." I asked her if it was a tie, and she said no. I asked her if it was a necklace and she said she didn't know, but maybe.

The Reader's Voice

I Am a Really Bad Guy!

Editor, Daily Nexus:

I am racist! I am sexist! School is a total joke, and I don't have any idea what I'm going to do with my life after I graduate — I'll probably go skiing. This is definitely not the way I feel, yet after four years at UCSB, it seems as though this is the way many of us in the greek community are perceived. Recent events and their portrayal in certain publications don't do anything to help this stereotype either. I can be engaged in a meaningful conversation with someone outside the greek community and the minute it becomes known that I am greek, the burden is on me to prove that I am not a narrow-minded elitist jerk! The stereotype is there. Never mind that I grew up in a racially integrated area. Never mind that I grew up in a lower middle class community and that in elementary school I participated in the busing program of the Los Angeles Unified School District. My junior high school was naturally integrated to the extent that it was one of the few which did not have to participate in a busing program. Yet, I'm culturally ignorant because I choose to affiliate with an organization. I'm clueless and I need to be educated. Never mind that my closest friends in high school were girls and that my relationship with them was strictly platonic. I am sexist and I don't have any idea how women feel. I have grown up in what many consider a culturally enriched environment but none of this matters anymore. I am greek.

I'm not saying everyone perceives us in this manner or that there are not individuals within the greek system who possess these views, yet to constantly bombard the greek system as a whole with accusations that we are this or we are that is somewhat hypocritical. There is a wide-range of thought and philosophy amongst the members of our community yet it always seems to get overshadowed by one event or another. To say a greek is this or a greek is that is as ridiculous as saying a woman is this, a Southern Californian is that, or supporting any racial stereotype. So for those who are always pointing fingers or approaching individuals in the greek system with some preconceived notions of what we are, I caution you to sit and think a moment as to whether or not you are guilty of the same narrow-minded mentality of which we are so often accused. Just like in any societal subset, whether it be racial, political, religious or so forth, the greek community is comprised of individuals. To be thought of as anything else because of my gender, race or affiliation is unjustified and unfair to those of us that usually sympathize with the problems which face our society.

Applauding Protest

Editor, Daily Nexus:

Dear Michelle Imperial,

I want to congratulate you on your column (Daily Nexus, "Stereotypes of Latinos Still Taint UCSB," April 27) on racist stereotyping regarding Mexicans at UCSB. It is startling but all too true that such ignorant and racist views exist at an institution of higher education. We cannot and will not tolerate such conditions. Besides continuing to educate whites about the reality of the multiethnic world around them, we need to confront such biases directly.

I applaud your voice of protest.

I'm not against protection of the environment; I am against institutionalized burglary. Would you, any of you, stand for it if a man broke into your apartment and looted your drawers, raped your privacy and demolished your security? I think not. Why stand for it, then, when a few sneaky individuals silently suck away another fistful of bills when you are submitting to the already horrific list of other fees every three months?
But you fell for it, UCSB. It's offensive to admit, but you're as much as asking them to steal your money. Maybe some of you want them to take it, but I don't; still, you've told them it's OK to rob me.

THE WARLORD

Tom Forman's Journey from UC Riverside to Bashing Heads to a UCSB Classroom

By Scott Easley, Reporter

The Warlord stood up, dazed from being slammed to the tarpaulin. Kokina hit him in the jaw, his sinews cracking like rubber bands as the spiked chain smashed his mouth.

Dazed and reeling, he fought for solid ground. Crimson against gray told him he had met the concrete floor — his jaw had unhinged, and blood pumped wildly from his mouth. He shook uncontrollably. The Warlord was scared for the first time in his World Pacific Wrestling Federation career.

Tom Forman stands 6'5" and weighs in around 265 pounds. A 24-year-old junior English major, he is now willing to talk openly about his wrestling days, a career that ended only a little more than two years ago.

His massive frame, draped by a tropical, short-sleeve button-down shirt, Tom seems relaxed resting on a modern, black leather chair in his Ellwood apartment. The hardest part of wrestling, he recalls, was putting it behind him.

The dividing line between Tom Forman and The Warlord had grown fuzzy, he said. "It eats you up," he recalls, leaning back in the chair. "I couldn't stand people. You get so caught up in your character that soon there is no difference. You train 6 days a week, 12 hours a day.

"You're always sore and banged up, and everyone hates you, and people think it's all fake. Then I would go out just to eat in public, and little kids would be throwing garbage at me, old ladies would spit on me—that's something hard to deal with."

Tom originally became interested in wrestling while a junior at UC Riverside. "I thought it was all fake, just like everybody else. I thought - 'Hey, what a party! Travel, have a fan club, and beat people up for money! Great!'" Tom shakes his head, smiling. "Now, I'm a retired pinhead."

After being put in touch with Kilisi Vailu'u, better known to ring fans as Captain Paradise, Tom found out that training to be a professional wrestler was harder than anything he had ever imagined. Captain Paradise became his manager, and under his guidance he began an intensive weightlifting and sprinting regimen, combined with a 15,000-calorie-a-day diet.

Ted Williamson, owner of Riverside's Spectrum Gym, arranged Tom's first meeting with Captain Paradise, and is therefore somewhat responsible for his wrestling career. "I knew that Tom was a great athlete, but I also knew that to survive in the ring, you need to adopt a more aggressive attitude. It's simply a rough sport."

He spent months simply learning how to fall and bounce off of the ring ropes, and it was almost a year before his first official fight. But Tom was good at it, and he enjoyed it. "I was a villain," he smiles, "because they said I was too ugly to be a good guy."

Body building champion Troy Zuccolotto suggested Tom's ring name, "The Warlord," during a training session. His trademark scream, neckchain, and blond mohawk came soon after.

Looking back, Tom says he is "a lot older and a lot smarter." He grins while watching a videotape of one of his matches on the television screen in front of him. "I'm just a puppy here ... this is one of my beginning matches. I look at this now and laugh."

On screen, The Warlord lumbers into the ring. A leering Captain Paradise restrains him on a five-foot long leash. The video is shaky and obviously hand-held, but the figure onscreen is clearly Tom.

The bell rings and he squares off against a huge, 350-pound opponent. "That's Samoan Joe. I hated him."

Despite appearances, professional wrestling involves intense violence. "You just can't walk in there, and do an act. You've got to be a little ... off. You've got to be a little wacko. Something has to be a little wrong upstairs. Essentially, it's a freak show," Tom said.

"It's a tight-knit fraternity. A real old-boys' institution on the wrestling circuit. You spend two years eating dirt before you make it. But I loved being the bad guy. I could never be out of character by doing what I want. So I thought: 'This is great! I can do what I want, and get paid for it!'"

When asked why he made the decision to get out of wrestling, Tom turns off the television and stops smiling. "There's a point when two wrestlers just hate each other so much, they have a one-on-one match. For themselves. They forget the audience.

"Mine was with Kokina. That was the match when he broke my jaw open with my own collar and leash." Tom paused for a moment, then continued. "So I got up, and I just lost it. I threw a man out of his front-row chair, ripped the chair out of the flooring, and then went in the ring and repeatedly beat Kokina in the head with it."

"He fell back on the mat, eyes rolling up—he was out. I looked around, people were going nuts. Yelling, screaming, applauding. My manager was standing there, shouting, 'Kill him! Kill the guy! Kill him!' Then I looked to my side, and I saw something I'll never forget - I saw a grown man holding his tiny little daughter up to see me beat this guy senseless with a chair, and she was giving me the finger."

Tom shakes his head. "I just walked out. I had enough. I just had enough."

Returning to Riverside, he totally withdrew from people for a period of four months. "It took about two years to entirely detox from being The Warlord."

Using the money he earned wrestling, Tom opened a restaurant called Christopher's in Riverside. It kept him busy and focused. "The biggest thing that I had to unwind from is the pain endurance. You learn to like it. Pain is a drug, and you can get addicted."

"I would go out, just looking for a fight. I could take six or seven full hits to the face, just to crack myself up. That's what you know, that's how you think. Wrestling is hideous."

Having taken up Tai-Chi-Chuan — a Chinese meditation exercise — relaxation comes easier, Tom said. Most wrestlers were not interested in mellowing out. They were mostly "idiots and pinheads," Tom recalls.

Forman, with blonde mohawk, grapples with a World Pacific Wrestling Federation opponent. The Warlord was a terror in the ring.

"I'll tell you what's going to happen. I predict that the athletic restrictions (in pro wrestling) will be loosened to the point of non-existence, and you're going to get even more violence and lunacy. It's going to be mindless entertainment, like the movie Rollerball."

"It's not that far off. And then a lot of young kids are going to walk in there, wanting to wrestle, thinking it's a party, and get crucified."

Tom is working on a book about his experiences and what he's learned from his years wrestling in the South Pacific, the primary region the World Pacific Wrestling Federation caters to.

The book could "make me a lot of enemies, but I'm hoping it will disgust enough people that they stop letting their kids watch it. People think it's all fake and fun. Meanwhile, there are these two big idiots out there, trying to kill each other. It's violence personified." (Tom's tag-team partner, The Wave, was thrown out of the WPWF for intentionally killing an opponent in Hawaii.)

Tom is mindful of the fact that he once thought it was all fake as well. He now has a metal collarbone, has suffered from occasional blindness, and has had his left arm, jaw and knuckles all broken in the same night. "I'm ... 24-years-old and walk with a cane when it's cold. And I can tell from the pain and arthritis when it's raining outside."

Williamson has noticed a change since Tom retired from the ring. "Tom has really settled down. There's an obvious difference in Tom now and Tom when he was wrestling. He's pretty boring now." He laughs.

"It's all behind me now," Tom said. "I proved to myself what I had to. I'm a lot mellow. I just walk away from guys who are trying to pick a fight. I know what I can do, I've been there, and I know what it's like to destroy your opponent. It's empty."

Tom looks around his room, surveying the photos and promotional pictures left over from his life as The Warlord. "There are two myths about big guys. The first is that we're all slow. The next is that we're all dumb. I'm at UCSB for a reason."

"I was a professional athlete, I opened up a restaurant, and I was Pacific Coast Champion. Officially, I have made it in life. But people still didn't give me any respect, because I didn't have the college degree. You need the college degree. Otherwise society says you haven't made it."

Tom points to a few of his textbooks. "So here I am. This is my current fight." He grins broadly, folding his arms, and concludes, "it's next."

Gauchos Win Tenth in a Row, Gear Up For Big Conference Series With CSUF

By Melissa Lalum
Staff Writer

About 11 games ago, Gaucho left fielder Jerrold Rountree must have taken a glance at his batting average and done some serious thinking.

The junior was hitting just .271, getting on base primarily via walks or out-running infield grounders. Since the Long Beach State series (March 13-15), though, Rountree has connected for at least one hit in his last 11 games—including the game winner against UC Irvine last Sunday. He has also watched his average rise to .319, fifth best on the team.

And Wednesday, Rountree once again found his niche at the plate going 3-4, collecting three RBI while leading UCSB (36-14, 10-5 in Big West) to a 9-6 nonconference victory over UCLA (32-20, 14-16 in Pac-10) at Campus Diamond.

"I was really getting down on myself for not playing as well as I could," Rountree said about his play earlier this season. "I had to come out here with a different attitude and not press so hard. I felt good at the plate today ... and if I can set the tone of that, then it kinda pumps the team up."

The junior also found time to steal one of two bases and make a clutch catch in the ninth which helped #22 Santa Barbara seal its tenth straight win. It was the second time this season the Gauchos defeated the #20 Bruins (the first win was 8-5 on March 15).

Rountree started UCSB off with a hard hit grounder up the middle, before getting picked off. The Gauchos went ahead

FEELIN' GOOD — The UCSB baseball team continued to sparkle Wednesday at Campus Diamond. The Gauchos beat UCLA for the second time this season.

TONY PIERCE

This Week In B-Ball, Barfing & Stressing

When my pal Matt and I agreed to coach little league this spring, I had visions of teaching the kids how to bunt correctly, keep their heads down on a hard grounder, and have a good time, you know.

I expected buying the team sodas after a win, overweight team mothers with buttons which read: "I (heart) Timmy," and dads who'd yell at me for pulling their kid after he got shelled.

But what we soon discovered was that today's youth are, for the most part, drug-dazed malcontents who'd rather be playing Nintendo than enjoying a nicely turned 6-4-3 double play.

Now these guys aren't on drugs, per se, they just walk around in a cloud of 9 year-old dreaminess that you normally consider a trait of love-sick pre-teen girls or 81-year-old conservative ex-President types.

Now when I was a boy... No really, when I was in little league my mom thought I was hyper or something. I can't remember missing a practice, or having a ground ball pass by me because I was looking at the dog show behind the left field fence.

Yeah, the dog show distracted a number of us who never thought the twain would meet.

On the other hand, we also have a boy who'll be a total Mickey Hatcher when he grows up ... er, gets older. The kid's name is Eras and he's always dirty, with his pants falling down and a big goofy smile on his face. He's our catcher, by default.

Anyway, you gotta love Erasmo when one of our pitchers is up there making dents into the backstop. He'll most likely pout before throwing back the ball and whine, "Come on, maaaaaan. Gahd, jez throw eht over the plaaate." It's at those times I remember that the cup I threw into the equipment bag was his.

Matt and I can't help but laugh about these things.

At the same time it's pretty sad to see some of the coaches on the other team. Like Matt said, most of them are mustachioed thirtysomething guys dressed in bad CHiPs reflective sunglasses, their team's uniform, hat and (look out) stirrups.

At our first game, Matt's long blonde hair was falling out of his cap; his hairy legs sticking out of his shorts. I had a bowling shirt on and shorts.

The problem with the other coaches is that they take the games so seriously. They forget that it's a major accomplishment for any of these guys to catch a fly ball. Yeah, we take it a little too seriously a lot of times, but when we got a partying Erasmo yelling at our guy

HANG TIME! — UCSB's Colman Conroy has emerged as one of the premier high jumpers in the nation. An English major with a 3.25 GPA, Conroy will be heading to the Nationals later this year.

High-Jump Star Making His Mark In Gaucho Track & Field Program

BY KEVIN O'CONNOR, STAFF WRITER

Cool as a cucumber — that's what Colman Conroy is. Whether he's just walking to class or going for his final leap at a meet, when all the chips are down, you wouldn't know the difference from looking at Conroy's face.

Conroy is one of the top 10 jumpers in the country. His success can be measured through his consistency — Colman always jumps well ... very well.

And he's been doing it for a long time now.

"I remember in grammar school we had the standing long jump in a little mini-olympics that we would have for the school," Colman said. "I would win that. When you're a kid and you win something you enjoy really enjoy it. There's always the fastest kid in the class or the strongest kid that everyone looks up to — so it was kind of special."

Colman competed on the St. Ignatius High School basketball and track teams in San Francisco. The six-foot freshman grew up on basketball, but found that track was more to his liking.

Eckenrode Shines as Golfers Finish Disappointing Season

By Roger Onishi

The season started out so promising.

The UCSB golf team won the team championship at its home tournament in the third start of the year.

However, that was way back in November. Since that time the Gauchos have had a rough ride, finishing in the bottom five of most of the tournaments they have participated in.

But perhaps a long plane ride to Utah would help turn some of those hooks into draws, and slices into fades, as the Gauchos set its sights on the Cougar Classic. The results were somewhat promising.

The Riverside Country Club layout would not allow a

Spirit Squad to Take New Format

By Andrew Paul
Staff Writer

As the UCSB basketball program continues to explore new lands, seek out new civilizations, and go where no hoopster teams have ever gone before, its supporting cast must keep up with the pace set by the new trek.

Since the men's basketball team recorded its third consecutive 20-win season and the only NCAA tournament victory in school history this year, the standards are being raised for the entire program. Adjustments and improvements have been made to the pep band, the format for ticket distribution, and most recently to the spirit squad.

In past years, the spirit squad was mostly made up solely of cheerleaders. However, beginning with the 1990-91 school year, the squad will be comprised of three separate components: cheerleaders, dancers, and a stunt team.

UCSB Assistant Athletic Director Jim Romeo feels that the revamping of the cheerleading program is a necessary and deserved measure.

"There has been a lot of interest in the cheerleading program," Romeo said. "We want to encourage as many people that are interested to come try out for our squads."

A kickoff meeting will take place on Thursday, May 3 at 9 p.m. in Rob Gym

CONROY: Track Star Looks Toward Nationals

"I always liked basketball, football and baseball, but in high school the more I participated in track, the more I liked it. It's not just because track's what I'm best at. There are so many different events — There's something for everyone. Even if you're terrible you've still got your goals and your own personal records. Track is kind of black and white — you either make it or you don't."

And it was love at first sight when Colman was first introduced to the high jump back in high school.

"I went out to the track and I saw a bunch of guys sitting around and talking by the (high jump) pit," Conroy said. "And I said to myself, 'This is the event for me.' You see a lot of other guys sprinting around the track or going on ten-mile runs and that just wasn't going to do it for me."

Conroy made an immediate impact when he came to the UCSB track team last year as a freshman. He took five first-places overall, and also jumped 6'11 3/4" to take second at the Big West conference championships.

In this, his sophomore year, Conroy has won just about everything. He has registered a dozen first-places so far this season and his school record 7'3 1/4" makes him the very best jumper on the West Coast.

"This year I didn't put limits on myself," Conroy said. "The bar hasn't been looking that high to me. Last year 7'1" looked overwhelming to me. But now it looks more like 6'. It's not that intimidating at all this year."

Colman also attributes a lot of his success to the coaching he has received in the Gaucho track program. He values the insights and perspectives that are offered by Ron Wopat and Sam Adams and gets a lot of support from his fellow athletes on the team as well.

"One of the reasons that I'm jumping better this year is because there's two other guys jumping with me," Col-ful conditions ... and he can do that."

Conroy has an impressive ability to focus when he's jumping. At a dual-meet in Fresno earlier this season, a collection of Fresno State players were congregating next to the high jump pit while Colman was jumping, with people even crossing right through his approach path. Colman was able to block out all of those distractions and jump 7'2".

The man is cool.

"We tease him about hav-he's out there giving a clinic."

Conroy starts 66 feet away from the high jump bar. He takes 10 steps and then turns around under the bar and flops over it with his back arched. But Conroy himself isn't much into analyzing his technique.

"It really is funny," Colman said. "I don't know how it works, but Dick Fosbury (who won the 1968 Olympics with his new and revolutionary 'Fosbury Flop') figured out how it works. And as long as the pit's there to land on that's all that matters to me."

"For me it's kind of like chunks during my jump," Conroy said. "I'm standing there, and then I'm running and the next thing I know I've landed. And I look up at the bar and if it's still up there it's just a relief."

Colman has high but attainable goals for himself. He has already qualified for the Division I Nationals and plans to compete in the TAC National Championships this summer. Colman is also planning on a trip to the Olympics in 1992.

With all the time he spends practicing and competing, the English major's 3.25 GPA is especially impressive.

"I really like to read," Conroy said. "I just like analyzing different stories. You get different philosophies and views of life. It's nice. It gets my mind off competition. There's definitely other things besides track ... that's for sure."

SCOTT COOKSON Daily Nexus

man said. "When you're with two other guys you have a good time — in practice especially. It's not tedious. I look forward to practice."

But Colman's teammates and coaches see his success simply as more of a result of his own personal attributes.

"He's really a super guy," Head Coach Sam Adams said. "He's the kind of guy you'd want to have as the model for the UCSB track person. He's a cool guy. Any success in athletics has a great deal to do with keeping your head under stressing an ego," fellow high jumper Chris Findley said. "But that's because it's not there. He doesn't have an ego problem, and that puts him at ease."

Conroy's impressive consistency seems to stem from his excellent technique. He has a relatively short run up which is almost exactly the same from jump to jump.

"His run up is very precise," Chris Findley said. "And his curve is very tight. His technique is almost picture perfect. At meets coaches from other schools film him ... basically because Coach Gary Adams said. "It was a combination of us playing crappy and them playing well."

"I thought that we did a very good job offensively, which sounds ironic because we struck out 10 times and we aren't a strike out team," UCSB Head Coach Al Ferrer said. "I was told that (David) Zancanaro was throwing 93 mph and he's a first round pick, to do that (against Zancanaro) is very exciting."

Zancanaro (9-5), the Bruins ace, is a likely top draft choice. Before leaving the game, the southpaw had given up eight runs, only three of which were earned.

In the third, UCLA retaliated, scoring all six of its runs. Gaucho starters Shawn Loucks (9-2, 6.15 ERA) and reliever Jon Gianulias (5 saves), however, did contain UCLA's offensive weapon, Paul Ellis, who has 25 homers so far this year. The catcher was just 1 for 3 on the afternoon, while striking out once.

Santa Barbara tied the game in the fourth as Rountree singled in two runs. And then in the fifth the Gauchos chalked-up another well executed inning as a Satriano sacrifice fly brought in the run which put UCSB ahead. Both Rountree and Satriano ended the game with acrobatic catches, while the Bruins tying run was at the plate.

"I just knew I had to make that play," Rountree said. "I was going to go for it no matter what."

Next up, UCSB travels to league-leading Cal State Fullerton for the weekend.

early, scoring four runs in the first, all which were unearned. With two on and two outs, UCLA right fielder David Tokheim misplayed a Nick Satriano routine fly ball, allowing one run to score while keeping the inning alive. First baseman Sean Luft then blasted his tenth home run of the season, upping the score to 4-0. Seven of UCSB's nine runs came in innings with two outs.

54-hole total below 216. Individually, Gaucho Todd Eckenrode was in contention for the title going into the final round, but slipped to a 79. UNLV's Hub Goyen defeated Dean Wilson of host BYU in a sudden death playoff to take individual honors. Ultimately, Derek Gilchrist was the low man for UCSB.

As for the team competition, BYU played a rude host as it took home the trophy, edging UNLV by four strokes. The Gauchos finished a respectable eighth out of 15 teams.

Now with a little momentum, the Gauchos were ready to compete in the Big West Championships. And one Gaucho made up his mind that this was his tournament to shine, and he nearly pulled off the upset.

Todd Eckenrode, UCSB's No. 1 player, used a final round of three under par, 69, to finish in a tie for fourth, only five shots off the pace. Only three players shot better 54-hole totals than Eckenrode, who completed regulation play at 216. Geoff Griffin of Fresno St. cruised to the individual title, defeating Mike Foster of San Jose St. by two shots.

In the team competition, FSU won its fifth consecutive team title, besting UNLV by six strokes.

About 70 percent of UC Berkeley students honored a boycott of on-campus classes on April 20, to support greater campus diversity.

Half-empty campus bike racks, cafes overflowing with students, and lines of protesters characterized the first day of a two-day strike called by the United Front, an ad hoc student coalition formed earlier this month.

Chanting, "diversity is for everybody, don't cross the line," more than a thousand demonstrators wearing purple arm bands organized pickets at all major entrances to campus.

"The strike is a success," said Guillerma Frias, a spokesperson for the United Front and a UC Berkeley sophomore. "This sends a message to this institution that there is wide support for our demands."

However, reactions from students who attended classes were mixed.

"I think there are more effective ways to negotiate with the university," said Theresa, a UC Berkeley sophomore who did not state her last name.

The university administration brought in at least 33 extra UC police for the event. However, campus spokesperson Ray Colvig said the strike was a peaceful part of Berkeley tradition.

"The officials from the United Front kept their word that this would be a peaceful strike," Colvig said. "They have made their point by picketing and flyering and it is part of the process of expressing concern at this university."

While a throng of protesters blocked the entire Sproul Plaza entrance to campus, fewer people gathered at other entrances, and some quit their posts as early as 4 p.m., two and a half hours before classes ended for the day.

Many students who crossed the picket line said they supported the idea of diversity, but not the specific demands or methods of the protesters.

Compliance with the strike varied from class to class, with some 300-person economics sections nearly filled but many sociology and English classes and discussion sections mostly deserted.

High noon on the Quad. Shadowy figures emerged from every tree-shaded corner to the strains of the Cal Aggie Marching "Band-uh".

Cheerleaders, hangers-on, kids, people eating lunch, and six nervous milkers awaited the arrival of the most important guests at Picnic Day's annual Cow Milking Competition April 19.

Finally, a truck arrived. The fateful four-teated bovines had come. Cow #32 (Frankie) and cow #962 (Grandma), their udders swollen, seemed to demand a reckoning. A feat of glory. A milking.

Stan Nosek, director of campus events and information, specified that each cow must be milked for a total of two minutes, with contestants rotating between turns. "The total amount of milk will be measured in gradual cylinders by professional cow-milking judges," he said.

Once the cows were in parallel milking position, the first two hopeful contestants strapped on their spring-bottomed stools and knelt beside their buckets. To the soothing strains of the Band-uh playing James Brown's "I Feel Good!", Bob "Give 'em a good yank!" Franks, assistant vice chancellor of Student Affairs, milked furiously against Harry "Hold 'em loose!" Walker, Picnic Day's Parade Marshal.

Both cows kicked their buckets over and the crowd waited with bated breath as milk began to fly. Undaunted, the Band-uh played on, now accompanied by the Cal Aggie Spirit Squad.

Franks captured the honor of best milker with an impressive 800ml and a mean technique.

BERKELEY — Artist Mark Brest van Kempen was gulping down a spoonful of Trix one morning when judges notified him that his cosmic entry had just won a national competition to commemorate the 25th anniversary of the Free Speech Movement at the University of California, Berkeley.

The winning entry is a six-inch circle of dirt with a unique twist: The tiny plot of land is designed to be granted international sovereignty.

Competition sponsors say it would be the first piece of land in the world that no one owns.

Entitled "Cylinder of Free Space," the circle would be surrounded by a flat, six-foot granite ring with the inscription: "This soil and the air space extending above it shall not be a part of any nation and shall not be subject to any entity's jurisdiction."

The artist says he will apply to have the dirt circle secede from the university, the city of Berkeley, Alameda County, the state of California, and the United States.

Brest van Kempen, 28, knows his hands may be tied in red tape, but that's part of the conceptual art nature of his winning entry, he said.

The artist, who was 3 years old when the Free Speech Movement took place, is a native of Utah and a graduate student at the San Francisco Art Institute, majoring in performance video.

"By removing even six inches of land from the jurisdiction of any government, the piece provides a clean slate for re-envisioning the relationship between politics, land and freedom," he said.

Wubba Wubba!

A spangly belly dancer displays her, ah, appreciation of the UCSB staff during, what else? Staff Appreciation Week.

The concentric circles would be located in UCB's Sproul Plaza, the site of the famous Free Speech Movement demonstrations that resulted in the lifting of a university prohibition of political canvassing.

Brest van Kempen will be funded up to $70,000 in privately raised donations to create the work, which must be approved by various campus committees as well as by the campus chancellor.

Since the art project would require the university to give up the tiny circle of land, the Board of Regents, which owns the land as a public trust, apparently would have to approve any deal, Colvig said. "But the land would eventually have to be owned by someone," he explained. "You just can't deed the land to no one."

Chuck in centerfield, who's adjusting his hat (with his back turned to the plate), or Philip who's ghost pitching at short, it sorta puts things in perspective.

Now our little guys, predictably they're the ones who stress out the most, and they show it in the oddest ways. We've had two one-run games these last couple days and both times I've had a frightened little guy come up to me with a big, smiling grin and say "Tony, do you mind if I rest this inning?"

Rest?

At practice the other day I had this guy, Eric, out in the sun running (he has this habit of skipping when he starts spacing out). Eric always seems to get "headaches" during tough practices. "I ain't lookin' to sleep with ya," I said once, hopefully kidding over his head.

So the other day he says, "I don't want to complain, Coach, but I have a headache again." I gave him this speech about Kirk Gibson probably having a headache in the World Series when he hit his famous dinger.

A few minutes later Matt said, "Hey Tone, you know you have an Eric behind the backstop barfing?"

I wasn't aware. So I went back there to see what sort of permanent damage I'd done to this poor kid. Sun glistening off his pale skin, and me standing over him probably didn't do a lot to comfort him. I said, "You OK?"

"No, but it's OK I'm not dying or anything."

I'm glad I have a team full of these morons.

1430 (new aerobics studio). Tryouts will take place May 18, 19, and 20.

By separating the spirit squad into components, Romeo hopes to enable each group to concentrate more specifically on certain areas.

"It is important that everyone is made aware of the meeting and the tryouts," Romeo emphasized. "We want the spirit squad to represent all the students at UCSB, so everyone that is interested is encouraged to tryout."

Sandy Allen, head of the cheerleading program, shares the same feelings as Romeo.

"These kids are the ambassadors for the school," Allen said. "(UCSB) is a leader in ethnic balance and the cheerleading program should represent that."

Talent, though, will still be the primary basis for selecting a squad. With the addition of a stunt team, Romeo and Allen expect more males to tryout this year, and both hope for even a bigger and better spirit squad.
