VOID AFTER FEB. 21

The Rising Cost of Courting

February 14. The date conjures up thoughts of candlelit dinners and romantic walks along the California coastline.

And why not, it's Saint Valentine's Day, that one day each year when fluttering hearts take over — despite the economic indicators — and many make an effort to impress the one they secretly love, admire, are infatuated with or just get old goosepimples when thinking of that special person.

But before you throw the new log on the fire, before the 1966 bottle of Chateau Brionne is uncorked and before too much else transpires, consider for a moment the true costs of Valentine's Day.

Now don't misinterpret what follows. Valentine's Day continues to be a special day, yet increasingly it is dependent on one's economic viability. The cost of falling in love has soared in recent years, and just seems that on Valentine's Day the increased costs become more evident.

So be advised young lovers: the cost of courtship could drive you to the brink of economic hardship before you reach the altar.

A New York city economist says while the cost of living has soared 158 percent since the early 1950s, the cost of loving is up 419 percent.

For instance:

— A dozen long-stemmed roses has jumped from $5 to $48. In this area the cost hovers about the $25 level if purchased in the store. If a delivery is to be made you can tack on additional charges proportionate to the distance the location the flowers are to be sent to is from the florist's shop.

— A bottle of fine champagne that once cost $12 is now up to an estimated $50. While Cold Duck continues to be priced around $3, and other local bottles no more than $7, a truly classy bottle, or at least one with a long French name, will take enough dollars away that one bottle may not drown the misery of paying for it in the first place.

— Marriage licenses that went for $2 in 1954 would cost a couple $22 today in San Diego. Marriage? Nothing more needs to be said for budget cutters know what must go first!

Raymond DeVoe Jr., a market strategist for Bruns Nordeman Rae and Co., a securities firm said all he is trying to prove with such findings is that Consumer Price Index figures are misleading and that "inflation affects different people in different ways."

To illustrate this, DeVoe compiled the cost-of-loving index, comparing dating costs today to what he had to spend in the early 1950s in New York City.

Beginning with the cost of the first meeting over Cokes and finishing with the diamond engagement ring and honeymoon, DeVoe created a statistical representation of courtship from 87 items.

Other common items of courtship in the economists' lovers' shopping list today might include $22 theater tickets, which cost $4 30 years ago and a $5 movie ticket, which once set film enthusiasts back $1. Thank God for discount movie night in Santa Barbara!

Compounding overall price rises throughout the economy, DeVoe said, is the basic shortage of luxury items, such as the dozen roses and champagne, which he regards as "upper-middle-class" acouterments.

"This is an indication of an upwardly mobile society," DeVoe said. "People are spoiled; they make more and more demands for these limited things. There aren't that many trappings of wealth to go around."

In addition, census figures show that people are still marrying, but marrying late, resulting in more single people courting each other nowadays. Therefore, the number of people for whom others want to buy luxuries is raising the cost of living.

The median age for a woman's first marriage was 20.8 years, according to 1970 census figures. In 1979 it was 22.1 years.

Single women between the ages of 20 and 24 comprised 35.8 percent of the population over 14 in 1970. Nine years later, the numbers indicate it is up to 49.4 percent.

Finally if the costly rituals inherent in wooing a spouse to the altar doesn't set you back, the honeymoon will. DeVoe said, in conclusion, that seven days and six nights at a Bermuda Islands hotel today costs $950. In 1954, it was $285.

Somewhere in all of this there is a lesson to be learned. First the changing political and economic climate has made the previously unheard of practice of going "Dutch" a regular and accepted, if not desired, happening today. Chalk one up for women.

And second, despite the growing economic inviability, doing something nice for someone you care for is still the right thing to do. It just may have to be done without the expensive champagne and long stemmed roses. More accurately, this Feb. 14, a short handwritten note, stating "Won't You Be My Valentine" or "I Love You" may be all that is needed.

Jolly Green,
One day we met, I'll never forget. You were 5-11, me, I was in heaven. We were both drunk, but who was to blame, for we were at a party, you couldn't even remember my name.

I awoke the next morning, not knowing what to do, for I remembered your name, even what you looked like too. Joe Baseball had never thought, that you would have been such a beautiful person, even moreso when Heidi walked in.

My knees have been aching,
the scars seem to show.
The secret that is between us,
only U and I need know.

And now that years, have come and gone, its memories like these that linger on and on, there are times, when I felt like crying, knowing if you were to go, my life would be...

I love you Hops, more than you'll ever know, and even these words, cannot show.

That if life was an ocean, you are my ship, guiding me through so many says - surely you have the looks that would blow Picasso's mind.

For my special friends:

Jean L., David J. karen S.,
Bill S., Debbie S., Bob N.,

On Valentine's Day, 1981:
A friend like you is very rare;

You know the meaning of "to care."

With you around it's all quite fair,

And there's no burden I can't bear.

Sometimes your breezy like the air,

And then sometimes you aren't
there;

but times together, things we share,

I hope we never see them wear.

If you come by, sit in my chair,
I'll serve you up a peach or pair.

My Valentine be, if you dare.
A friend like you is very rare.

HEY PORTER!!

Just remember, I'm the one who said "'tis better to give than to receive!" (I didn't know I was going to have to compete for attention tho!)

HAPPY VALENTINES DAY!!

Love, whatshername

Querida Elena no tengo palabras para decirte como te amo. Solo quiero darle felicitaciones en este dia de los amorados.

Con todo mi amor,
TU PAPI

Hey Sharon, you would think that with a roommate who has worked at this paper for endless quarters you would have had a personal long before this. Sorry, but this is the first one I got free. Listen kiddo, if I don't see you this weekend (you workaholic, you) I still want you to be my Valentine. What do you think? Sound like a plan? We may not be much, but we're the best we got. Hang in there for a few more weeks and then we can look forward to a quarter that'll bring us a little closer to Burnardoz and a lot further from Ortega. Lots of love, Jane.

"Cheaply" Yours

P.O. —

I hope VD, oops, Valentine's Day is contagious, um, fun and all that uplifting type of stuff. The vacation coupon lasts only thru the weekend so take advantage of me, I mean, it.

And you thought I wasn't getting you two an anniversary present. Well, you were wrong. Here it is. Yes, this is it, guys, but try not to get too excited. Not good for the old hearts, ya know. Thanks for 19 years of fun and games (with me) and here's to at least 19 more of the same. Remember, in these, your golden years, that like good wine, you two and your marriage are not only getting older, you are also getting dustier. Oh wow, I am funny, aren't I? See you in the Spring. Love and Kisses, Jane.

Jan, do I have a proposition for you. Will you be my Valentine? No. Okay, okay, fine. See if I care. But can we get together this weekend anyway and eat some graham bread? Some corn chips, maybe? How about an entire cream cheese strudel? Meet me in Ortega for a hot weekend of cruising the dessert section. Orally yours, Jane.

Linda and Lynn and Stacy, you women are really special people in my life and I care for each of you in a unique and meaningful way. And if you believe that one, I have this great coke deal coming through with this girl named Monique. Want to write a check? I was going to ask you all to be my Valentines, but I already promised myself to Tim Curry. Sorry, maybe next year. Well, in conclusion, let's hear it for Idaho and I.V. and lots and lots of green paint and massive quantities of mind-altering drugs and, most of all, to not living on the sixth. Hugs and Kisses, Jane.

To Carl Sagan: You can invade my cosmos anytime! The thing from Xeno 4.

Kath: Thank for the carnation, you deserve a dozen. Don't forget about our Palm Springs (Las Vegas?) trip. Its coming soon. Hope your change of residence goes smoothly. Love always David, the sports nut.

Barny: We can't go much longer without...you know what! Is it time to start advertising?? — A wild and lonely kind of guy Happy Valentine's Day, Heidi! This will have to do — roses are too expensive.

To my little Cosmic kid: Wanna hug me and give me kisses till we fall into eternal bliss? I knew you'd see it my way, you sweet thing!! Happy Valentine's day lover...Gwe

Hey, Campus Desk, from one subeditor to another, tell me the truth, are all we Lois Lane-types really sexually frustrated? How much would you pay for some Superman-type to take you away from all this? Well, we're half way through the year. Can we take another half like the first? Don't answer that. Instead have yourself one heck of a Valentine's Day and we'll get together Monday to start all over again. Lots of Love from the County Desk.

V-Day is here, so have a good one, Jane M. and Cathy K. Valentine's Day is especially appropriate for you two sweet things — without your genuine friendship (and ribald humor), all those hours in the Nexus office would have been a lot drearier and frustrating. Thank Youuuuuuu!

With X & O's (sounds kinky!)

To "big" Davey the sports ed, your such a hunk but what does it matter? With a staff like yours it must be an infection for to get what you want you got to have what you need and you are hurtin for certin! But dont let it bother you big boy for all things must pass and sooner or later so will some ass. Just keep it in mind during these times that some blind buff will come along and make your day one to forget. So be like me and dazzle em with your photography because I lay them out and shoot them up and brother those are pictures that are worth more than a thousand words...! This is a message from your only friend...!

Bronwyn, Barbara, Sue, Tammy, Andrea, Robin, Diane (Whew!)

META DEAR!!!!

I know these are Valentine's Day greetings but amidst all of this sweetness, we have an extra special message to send to our very own birthday girl, today!

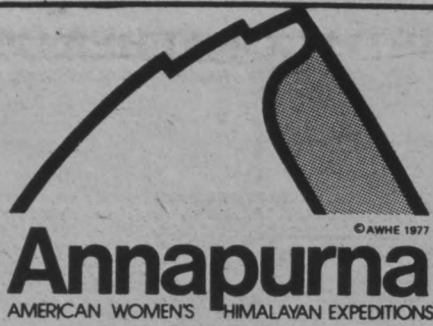

★ Happy Birthday, Meta! ★

Today is Friday, the 13th, and it only comes around once every so often, so let's make February 13 a day to remember! We all think that you're the greatest friend and roommate and now we just want to wish you enormous amounts of happiness today and everyday! We love you!! (Let's go skiing soon!)

Dear Kudos,
You lead in nine of ten categories that we can think of— but your handwriting has to improve. Maybe you should consider the typesetting service at the Nexus

All those who have spent a long day, and night, in the Nexus wish you a Happy Valentines Day.

Romantic Man — A Dying Breed?

"My boyfriend," began paragraph two, "is a romantic neanderthal."

Joyce's Valentine's Day card arrived a few days ago and enclosed was another polemical letter on The Demise of the Romantic Man. I sighed and stared into space for a moment. My old girlfriend Joyce moved to San Francisco over a year ago, harboring visions of, as I recall, "moon-lit marina walks and Golden Gate Park picnics with a first-round draft choice." She found Bob three weeks ago after many fruitless endeavours, she said, and though he arrived in a Ford Pinto rather than on a white horse, she had high hopes of polishing this rookie into a Valentine clone, or the equivalent.

I read on. "Last week I gave him this list of romantic things we could do together. Read it and tell me what you think." Well, it was a good idea, Joyce, but I don't think I'll tell you what I really thought. That list spurred some bad memories...

"1. Long walks and conversation in the afternoons or evenings in picturesque places." My mind flashed back to Sally. When I first met Sally, I thought, "she's so unique, so mysterious..." Actually, she was just so weird. I remember the night we walked around Santa Barbara for hours talking about weird (uniquemysterious?) things and then we suddenly paused under a street lamp. I looked into her eyes, drew her closer, and...

A car screeched around the corner. "Go for it!" came a booming drunken chorus from inside. "Piss off, you jerks!" screamed Sally.

In that moment I realized that Sally had a personality like fingernails on a chalkboard.

"2. Picnics in the park, maybe in the hills across the Bay when it gets warm." Well, I like that idea. "Let's head to the mountains," I said to Elaine one fine May morning. "I know of a green pasture where we can spread out a blanket and eat sandwiches and drink wine and recline in the sun. What say you, fair lady?"

Elaine rolled her eyes heavenward. "Wonderful. You want to go lay and sweat in a field of cow manure while insects stage maneuvers on us. Thanks, but no way. Besides, all my bloomers are in the wash. (Elaine was no trooper.

"Can't you think of anything to do indoors?," she would often whine.)

This give and take went on for the next five items. (One reminded me of the time when Lori and I were standing on the campus cliffs at twilight gazing out toward the islands and Lori said "hold those Dixie cups over here" and I said "watch where you're pointing that bottle" and then she ricocheted a champagne cork off my forehead.) Why am I telling you all this? Well, I think it is because her letter inspired me to try and express my own frustration over how so many romantic endeavours go awry. (Did you know that one date of mine did a Bronx cheer in the middle of Casablanca?) I mean, maybe the Romantic Man is on the decline, but I'm convinced some of the male population still tries to live up to the ideal. And this Valentine's Day I hope all the women readers will give them a chance, or that someone will give me a chance, anyway.

"Doug," Joyce ended her letter, "you're part of a dying breed."

Small wonder. One time I gave Joyce a rose, and she was so excited she lept into my arms and we fell down a flight of steps.

NEXITES EVERYWHERE
HEED THESE WORDS:

The boss has ordained Feb. 15 as national 'No Nexus Day,' so don't come to work. Nurse those hangovers, ski down the snowy slopes but forget the office; it will still be there on Monday.

Maniacal Madness in a Controlled Atmosphere

To The Nexus Staff:

We start with a story, a prayer, and a deadline,

And grope our way from copy to headline.

First to the writer, say Gursky or Alburger,

Or maybe to Hutchinson, Hall, or Keller.

Then to an editor, say Bowman or Musser,

Or to assistants Leshay, Leff, or Miller.

From writer to editor the story will go,

A front-page dandy, as we all know.

Susie and Andrea, Elaine and Nance,

Read each story of circumstance. A laugh, a giggle, a car and dog;

The copy desk deals with all backlog.

Dancing fingers type the hard copy,

VDT prevents the sloppy.

Typeset and perfect, the story's complete,

Forget the hard copy— it's never neat.

Waxing poetic, alone at her desk, Cathy Kelly makes sense of the mess.

Layouts in her hand, headlines in mind,

Stoic Cathy makes fun of the grind.

Barb, Kelly and Karl work long all night,

Pasting and cutting to make what's wrong right.

Sue and Gwen use knife, ink, and machine,

For fixing and typing and making it clean.

The paper is done, to the reader it goes,

Come Sunday we'll deal with Friday's woes.
