Franco and Rosa - Great Comida Mexicana

By Holly Bohannon

Nestled snugly between Thrifty's Drug Store and Home Federal in New Towne Goleta's Fairview Center, like cheese in a fresh made ravioli, sits the warm 'n' cozy Franco and Rosa's Italian Cuisine.

Inviting as a Sunday family get-to-gether, Franco and Rosa's is well worth the excursion out of Isla Vista and beyond the all-too-common Old Towne restaurants we have all become familiar with. Yes, Franco and Rosa know how to treat a hungry, but adventurous diner right.

In what may be a daring change for Isla Vistas, there's not a single pizza on this menu.

But Mama Mia! The chicken parmigiana!

My, oh my, Franco and Rosa are not two to skimp on portions. This reviewer was stuffed to the gills with a HUGE serving of chicken parmigiana in hearty red sauce — with a healthy side of straight up spaghetti. I was forced to take half of the meal home.

The dynamic duo were also good 'bout supplying plenty of warm and lovely sourdough bread as well as a groovin' salad. The wine menu also offered an array of voluptuous vinos — my compadres and I selected a fine '87 (boy, do we love) Chianti Classico Caratello from Italy where it is made by this one Italian guy who is specifically named on the wine list, and whom I must personally thank for supplying Franco and Rosa with this superb fruity (with just a dash of WILD violets) yet dry yet subtle blend. Molte Grazie!

Boy, do we love Chianti! Despite the lack of pies on the menu, there are plenty o' pasta dishes and "entrees" to choose from. There is a suspicious amount of veal, which may concern some of you, but not my colleague Roscoe

DANA MCCOY/Daily Nexus

Frisco and Pepe's makes food that makes the heart sing.

Clancey Cohen who ordered up a big heap of the ground stuff on top of his noodles. (Boy, do we love Chianti!)

The whole time I sat there staring at those lovely "map o' Italy" placemats I couldn't help but wonder, "Am I in Sicily or is this heaven???" My suspicions were confirmed seconds later; only in Italy would they play such a moving, yes, tear-jerking, rendition of that classic tune, "Whiter Shade o' Pale"; in Italian no less.

Those Italians croon a mean lil' ditty! Give 'em a boat and a pole...and yes, you guessed it... O, Sole Mio! This evening of enchantment was well worth the price of admission.

Yes, young lovers come one, come all, because Franco and Rosa's — now that's amore! When the moon hits your eye like a big pizza pie — wait, no pizza here. Go to Woodstocks for that! Were talkin' 'bout serious Italian food here. Stuff to write the old country about, boys and girls! So get out that pen and paper and head on down to New Towne Goleta. Yes, brand spankin' new and ready for you to spill spaghetti sauce on.

This is the closest you'll get to Italy without having to hassle with those crazed Italian drivers, running over your gelato-filled booty. HAVOC! Get me a hammock to sleep off this righteous meal! Better yet, order up a cup of their pipin' hot espresso, and hop on over to Italy and compare this with the real thing (Coke TM).

Speaking of Italy, what about that exchange rate! Good deities! You can't get good food for Franco and Rosa's prices in that there country. Let's be Frank (or Rosa). They don't even make Mochas in Italy. And you have to look nice! Can you wear shorts there? If you want to freeze.

Let's just say, wear what you want to Franco and Rosa's pad and they'll be glad to have ya. Boun Appetito! Ciao! Il conto per favore, subito!

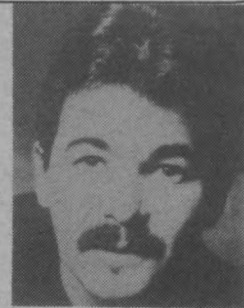

Ti vedo alla casa di Franco e Rosa. That's amore.

Caribbean Cuisine: Coolness!

Comida Mexicana Buenisimo: That's Pepe's

By Weston Briggs

As a young California tyke, dodging earthquake fissures and running naked through our commune's orchards, I always felt Mexican food to be a bit, well, mundane. I mean, granted, it was a nice change from the lentil soup and watered down red wine my vegetarian babysitter would give me, but it was still just the usual.

You see, beef tacos were the only dish my mom could really make. She sure as hell wasn't going to bake a damn cake; that was always made quite clear and Chinese food was my dad's domain. So I got to know how to roll a taco, but quick.

Mexican food got a bit more exciting for me when my uncle moved back into town. He settled into the two room shack out back and set about making a living. His underground newspaper had failed despite the sex cartoons and now he was looking to get into the lucrative college food market. Tacos, he said with a sage smile, there's a big future in tacos.

First he bought a trailer, a little rounded thing so light he could pull it with his red convertible MG. Then he painted it, transforming it into the best looking ten foot high taco you ever saw, Warholian pop art on wheels. He assembled the fixin's, got my mom's recipe and schlepped his elfish bearded self up the hill to set up on Bancroft and Telegraph, a prime spot to catch all the college kids spilling out of class or a demonstration.

I made a point of hanging out with my uncle after that. I'd ditch the lentil woman and have him babysit me. His method was brilliant: he'd make my bed on the couch in his miniscule "living room" and say, "OK, Weston, I'm going to bed. I want you to try and stay up all night." With that he'd disappear into his room leaving me to exhaust myself trying to see the dawn, invariably falling asleep after ten minutes of such effort.

Early in the morning he'd shake me and we'd climb into the MG, shivering. I'd watch out the back to make sure the taco trailer was taking all the turns and then we'd park in our designated spot. My uncle would give me money to go buy an orange smoothie while he started selling the morning items: donuts, coffee, tamales. Then I'd come back and spend the day in the taco trailer, handing hot sauce to charmed co-eds. Or, on nice days, I'd go play in the fountain with all the other kids and their dogs.

Well, my uncle's taco trailer went bankrupt in 1974 but my image of Mexican food was forever transformed. And so imagine how pleasant my surprise to find an old-time, good-time Mexican restaurant right here in Goleta, the down home Pepe's, just off Hollister.

Mexican restaurants these days tend to be either giant margarita pick-up joints with waitresses in paper mache mini-skirts or nouvelle cilantro havens which cost a fortune. But Pepe's is a nice solid place with lovely, hand crafted leather chairs that'll swallow you whole, chairs from which you can look out on a panoramic view of the historic center of old Goleta.

I started with the chicken fajitas, a dish my uncle never carried and the one concession Pepe's has made to the hip yuppie overclass of the area who wouldn't know a chingadera from a chimichanga, even if it was on the damn SAT.

The fajitas were delivered with much ceremony. First, a big plate of steaming rice, beans, guacamole, salsa and sour cream were set down with a warning — "watch out, hot plate!" — before the main event: a frying pan full of marinated breast chunks sizzling along with green peppers and onions. The frying pan was placed on a candle and a butter-broth was then poured on the meat-vegetable mix, an event accompanied with much hissing, steaming and a great floating of particulates across our table.

We were impressed to say the least, and ordered a pitcher of Miller in celebration — a mighty fulsome and reasonably priced pitcher I'd like to add.

The food was quite good — the salsa being an especial treat, the true test of any Mexican restaurant — and was neatly rounded off by a serving of that staff of life itself, flan. My fellow gourmand waxed poetical about planets where creatures rise from primordial seas of flan as I devoured the delicate custard.

You know, some day I'd like to have my own taco trailer. I know I'd sell flan.

Ventura Dating: It's Great

It's dark, it's warm, it's intellectual, it's My Dinner With Adam.

By Matt Curplew
Staff Writer

I have a theory that if you take a date to an Italian restaurant, she will invariably find reason to dump you on the spot.

I know, you're thinking it's a theory that only applies to me, Matt Curplew, and maybe you're right. Maybe it's just that I get dumped in Italian restaurants. I guess I like Italian food too much to spend time paying attention to a companion. And just when my appreciation of the Chianti and the angel-hair pasta and oh-that-sauce reaches its glorious peak, I get the big brush-off. Sounds plausible enough.

So clearly I need to find an alternative to the Italian dinner. A place that will suitably impress a date with my impeccable taste, originality, and general coolness, yet still allow me to interact with the person I came with.

Just this week I think I found such a place. The Ventura Theatre, perhaps best known as a contemporary concert venue, has certain qualities that seem ideal for a departure from the hazards of an Italian dinner.

For one, it doesn't have Italian food on its regular menu. What it does have is everything else. Teriyaki chicken. Seafood. Burgers. Vegetarian dishes. Traditional appetizers, and pies and ice cream for finishers. A full-fledged bar.

With selection like this, who couldn't find something to keep them happy? Like my gracious waitress said, "The food's surprisingly good here." And it was.

It's also got spectacular architecture. A high, sunburst chandelier. Ornate sculptures framing the stage. Towering ceilings.

But let me return to my dating dilemma. If the food is so good at the theatre, how do I keep from being as engrossed in the food as I am at an Italian place? Two words: The music.

The Ventura Theatre has concerts that accompany the culinary prelude. To my pleasant surprise, I found myself tapping my toes as I munched on a flavorful slice of teriyaki chicken. The Bombers, opening for the James Harman Group, started kickin' in some big horns-driven blues riffs that simply couldn't be ignored. The food could wait. The music could not. Folks just naturally started gravitating to the dance floor. (Be sure to make your reservations early, because people come in sizeable parties to enjoy the food/band combo).

But despite the allure of the dance floor, the food was hard to disregard. The entree were accompanied by a generous portion of garden salad, a host of dinner rolls, a bevy of vegetables, and a baked potato with sour cream and chives or some rice; the choice is yours.

My gracious waitress said that the specials ain't bad, either, particularly the chicken oriental stir-fry. But she noted that "everybody's satisfied with the chicken." Damn straight.

I'd like to say that all this good stuff resulted in a successful date. Alas, I went with my roommate, and he wasn't fooled by the fine show of taste I displayed in taking him along to the theatre. Instead of chicken, he enjoyed a hefty plate of Ahi, which he termed "a nicely tender portion of seafood."

Perhaps I should find a better date next time. But if I do, I won't hesitate to take 'em to the Ventura Theatre. Like The Bombers lead singer crooned:

"You don't rock'n'roll, baby, you don't have no fun at all." Indeed.

The ECen

THIS FRIDAY at the ECen — ERASURE!

Meanwhile... I know how students are, because I am one. Papers are due, books are on your shelf unread and finals are right around the corner. The best advice I have for the next couple of weeks is: STUDY. You can't be out drinkin' every night if you expect to do well on papers and tests. So dust off the cappuccino maker and sharpen up your pencils because it's time to earn you keep.
