IVCSC offers job placement, housing counseling to students

In an effort to make job placement services and housing counseling more available to students living in Isla Vista, the University has opened a joint office in the I.V. Community Service Center (IVCSC).

Under the direction of Bruce MacVicar who formerly worked in the Campus Placement Office, the new office will provide updated job listings and can serve as a further mediator between apartment management agencies and disgruntled students.

The office hours are from 3-5 p.m. and 7-9 p.m. on Mondays, Wednesdays, Thursday and Fridays, and from 11 a.m. - 3 p.m. on Saturdays. By staying open in the evening, it can provide services after the campus Offices close and also have more updated job listings.

Counseling on job opportunities and suggestions for finding jobs will be provided. However, MacVicar said that there are not enough jobs available for the students who need them.

Aside from the national economic situation, he said many employers in this area are skeptical of hiring some students purely because of their visual appearance.

He urges employers to be more objective toward hiring students with long hair or beards because jobs (financial support in college for many students) are getting harder to find.

Through housing counseling, MacVicar is hoping to inform students of all possible ways of working out problems with realtors before having to resort to court action.

Also, people who need rooms or roommates can post cards in the Office window.

Since the Office is an experiment, MacVicar said he is wide open for criticisms or suggestions for services that students would like to see offered.

Tac squad, demonstrators clash at Ky's S.F. speech

By LEE McEACHERN
DN Staff Writer

Flying rocks and bottles, screaming demonstrators and helmeted Tactical Squad police were the order of the day in San Francisco Tuesday. In the middle of it all but safely guarded by security forces and the walls of the Fairmont Hotel, while speaking to the Commonwealth Club, was the Vice President of South Vietnam, Nguyen Cao Ky.

The Vice President arrived at the hotel at 3 a.m. Tuesday and there by out-guessed demonstrators who began arriving much later in the morning in attempts to confront him.

As the number of demonstrators grew in the late morning hours, lines of police, including horsemen, tried to keep the crowd across the street and away from the Fairmont. Along with the swelling throng came many NLF banners raised in protest to Ky's presence.

Eventually, the crowd grew too large and monitors encouraged the people to begin a march around the block. As they walked, they chanted, "Hey, hey, what do you know? The Fairmont's having a puppet show," and "Off Ky."

Then trouble began. Demonstrators filled Powell Street and took over cable cars on which NLF flags were then displayed. In moved the police and there were altercations.

Activity then shifted to California Street near the Fairmont. The Tac Squad began clearing that street and was met by a barrage of rocks and bottles. When the two groups met at Jones Street, there were several arrests.

Further up Jones at Sacramento Street, barricades were being built by demonstrators out of heavy planks and paving stones. Again, the Tac Squad moved in and again they were attacked with rocks, bottles and this time, large paving stones. The hail of rocks also smashed several windows.

Law enforcement was difficult as the assembly of rioters—which was declared unlawful—had no center. The violence was sporadic, random and at times, fierce.

In the end, the score was policemen—three injured; rioters—several injured and 34 arrested. Ky was but a spectator significantly unaffected by the trouble outside.

I.V. reacts to new system

By DOUG ROBERTS
DN Staff Writer

We came across two members of the Foot Patrol seated on a table next to the Donut Shop and the Earth Art Market talking to four people. Noting their seated position, one patrolman suggested the "Foot Patrol" be renamed the "Butt Patrol."

"We had an office in I.V. for almost 5 hours Monday."

"What happened?"

"We were evicted. It was in the building with the realty company on Trigo. The other business in the building got 'cold feet.' They felt our presence would hurt their business. I doubt it would help."

"Why don't you move into the Earth Art Market?" queried a freak.

This exchange typified the conversations the Foot Patrol had on their first two days. Often the topics were more serious, dealing with the guns they were carrying, marijuana or the attitudes the patrolmen have.

Humor cropped up constantly though. "If it's so hard for you to make an arrest, how come it's so easy for me to get busted?" Both the patrolmen and

NSA delegation to visit North Vietnam: Becca Wilson and others seek treaty Becca Wilson, former editor of the El Gaucho, left last Sunday for North Vietnam. She is IVCC's representative on a 12 member delegation which will negotiate a peace treaty with the National Liberation Front (NLF). The delegation, composed of student body presidents and newspaper editors, is sponsored by the National Student Association.

Its members will travel to Hanoi via Moscow, and will remain there for about two weeks.

While in Hanoi, they will negotiate a treaty based on the Eight Point Peace Initiative presented by the National Liberation Front at the Paris Peace Talks. Major points in the negotiations include the withdrawal of United States troops by May 1, 1970 and the setting up of democratic elections in South Vietnam.

Delegates also intend to visit South Vietnam where they will investigate reports that Viet Cong prisoners are being tortured by South Vietnamese and American troops. This part of the trip, however, may have to be cancelled since the South Vietnamese government is reluctant to grant them visas.

South Vietnamese opposition apparently stems from the fact that the NSA sponsored a solidarity hunger strike to express its sympathy with those students who have been arrested in South Vietnam for their open opposition to the Thieu-Ky regime.

The South Vietnamese Embassy received instructions that no visa was to be granted to David Ifshin, president of the NSA. As of the time the delegation left, no visas had been granted to other students either.

Members of the delegation are acting in direct opposition to the Logan Act which forbids individual citizens from negotiating peace treaties with "the enemy."

Ifshin said however, "I think it's beyond governments at this point. We know there's a possible Logan Act entanglement but the action is right and that is the first consideration. It's a question of conscience before law."

Upon return to the United States, members of the negotiating team will travel throughout the country attempting to build support for the New Mobilization Committee's plan to hold a massive demonstration in Washington D.C. on May 1 if United States troops have not been withdrawn by then.

Supporters of the plan intend to "close down Washington" if the withdrawal has not been accomplished.

Other delegates include student body presidents from the University of Oregon, University of Indiana, Case Western Reserve University of New Hampshire, Boston University and Wheeling College.

Also included are a former veteran from Kent State, a councilman from the University of Hawaii, an affiliate of the New School in New York, President of the Minnesota Student Association, formerly of UC Berkeley's campus paper, a member of the Seattle Liberation Front and a member of the Puerto Rican Student Union.

Failure to reach agreement with local candidates after primary spurs boycott

By MIKE GROSSBERG
DN City Editor

(Editor's Note: This is the second segment of a three part analysis of the recent Chicano election boycott.)

"I think the whole country is ready for something new in politics. If an Anglo is ready, then a Chicano should be more than ready because he has been excluded from politics all his life," declared Arthur S. Avina, a Santa Barbara Chicano political leader.

Many Chicanos like Avina have concluded that the present political system is not receptive to their needs, yet before deciding to boycott the elections they have tried various alternatives.

According to Avina, local Chicanos first became really involved in politics in the 1968 primary races of Robert F. Kennedy and the assembly fight between Stanley Sheinbaum and Winfield Schomaker.

From these electoral battles, Chicanos got their first taste of political campaigning and, Avina feels, first thoughts that the best way to run a campaign is to run it yourself.

Their next experience was with the Julian Nava campaign for State Superintendent of Public Instruction, a campaign headed in the tri-counties by Avina.

In this campaign, Chicanos asked local democratic leaders for support, but found them already committed to Wilson Riles. They had made this commitment without any consultation with Chicano leaders and knowing that Nava was going to oppose him. "And we're supposed to belong to the same circles," commented Avina.

Striking out on their own, they ran a strictly Chicano Nava campaign with very few resources. Yet, in the primary Riles carried the tri-counties by only 1200 votes. This experience forced Avina to conclude that "We've got to do something to make people aware of what's happening to them."

During this same period several members of the UCSB Chicano community were engaged in numerous community activities. One of these was to bring food and other types of aid to striking workers in the Fillmore Lemon Strike.

From talking to people in Fillmore and similar areas, they concluded, in the opinion of Jesus Chavarria of the UCSB Chicano Studies Department, that Chicanos have the same issues with political parties as farm workers have with growers; those being a lack of representation, no decision making powers and the inability to use their resources for the good of the community.

They also began a search for alternatives to the present political structure.

These two groups met after the primary and decided to present a three-part proposal to several local democratic candidates. The proposal said that these Chicano leaders would conduct voter registration and voter education drives in their communities in support of those candidates, if they would finance them as solely Chicano directed campaigns.

All the candidates rejected the offer either because they had their own Chicanos to count on for support or because they did not want to lose direct control of their campaigns. Some further charged that the group was trying to blackmail funds from them by threatening to oppose their candidacies if they did not consent.

It was the failure of the proposal that led directly to the decision to boycott the election. "If you won't listen to us as democrats," Carpenteria City Councilman Olly Olivas told democratic leaders, "then you'll listen to us as Chicanos."

These Chicano leaders wanted to run political campaigns, but they now had no candidates to back. They also wanted, Avina felt, to "buck the party in a way they would understand." The answer to them was Huelga '70.

They saw the strike as an attempt to test the system to see if it could or even wanted to respond to their demands. It was an attempt "to show how the political process of the United States can work for minorities," added UCSB political scientist Charles Ornelas.

The strike also aimed at making both community members and public officials more aware of their unique problems. "Our effort," said Olivas, "is to let them know we exist, that our efforts are a meaningful force and that we should be listened to."

It was an action by its very nature that they felt would force people to react and justify their positions.

The boycott was organized by a nine man steering committee formed from the Chicano Political Action Organizing Committee. They opened an office on Milpas Street in Santa Barbara and Gene Martinez, a UCSB senior, was their coordinator.

Their tactic, according to Avina, was to apply no pressure on community members, but to let them come to the strikers and talk about the election and the boycott. They had weekly mass meetings in the office and used these as community forums on the boycott.

In addition they held a fiesta, used various forms of leafletting, utilized the media and in general conducted a full political campaign.

In organizing the boycott, the Huelga '70 leaders faced many obstacles inherent in their community and their type of organization.

A major problem was to justify a boycott as a viable political tactic. They had to change their communities' traditional manner

Intercourse in graveyards; increase could affect case

UNIPRESS (Los Angeles). Round two of former Daily Bruin editors John Parker and Joseph Hymson's fight to have obscenity charges against them dropped will begin Dec. 4.

Parker, former editor-in-chief, and Hymson, former editor of the DB arts supplement INTRO, were charged last June with publishing obscene material and distributing harmful material to minors.

The charges were made in connection with the publication of a photograph on the cover of the May 27 INTRO depicting a couple apparently engaged in sexual intercourse in a graveyard.

DISMISSAL

On Dec. 4 their attorney, John Weston (from the firm of Stanley Leishman — a specialist in obscenity cases), will request a motion for dismissal for the second time. A previous motion for dismissal was denied last July by Municipal Court Judge Louis Light.

Light also refused to drop the charges against the editors for distributing harmful matter to minors. Weston, in his defense, said the photo appeared in a campus newspaper and there was no evidence that any minors had seen it. He added no minors had claimed to be injured parties in the case.

Although the case was scheduled to begin Nov. 15 at the Los Angeles Municipal Court, Division 20, Hymson and Parker, after waiting two days, were told by Light that their pre-trial hearing was postponed until Dec. 4.

DEFENSE

Weston said if the motion to dismiss is denied then, the trial will begin. Weston added his defense will be based on the 14th Amendment of the United States Constitution.

According to Parker, who is now employed by a Riverside paper, "The picture was not obscene...pictures which are more graphic are available to minors in Playboy magazine. If Chief Ed Davis (LAPD chief) proves there is an increase of people having intercourse in graveyards, then I'll say he is right."

Parker added he is optimistic about the case.

Parker and Hymson were arrested the evening of June 8 at their homes. They were both released that night on bail set at $1259 apiece.

The complaint against the two former editors was signed by Los Angeles vice officers. After the arrest, the city attorney's office said Chancellor Charles E. Young had been asked to sign the complaint, but Young refused and had ordered his staff members not to sign it.

Later Young denied that he had ever been approached with the complaint.

Chicano election boycott faced fear and lack of time and resources of voting which had been built up for many years. "Political behavior is difficult to change," Chavarria stated, "and especially difficult to change rationally."

Opposition naturally came from established political organizations. The Democratic party campaigned against the boycott as did local candidates. Even the editor of the Santa Barbara News-Press came out with an editorial against the boycott.

Added to these problems were the unique problems of organizing political activity in minority areas. Those people, because of their economic condition, are necessarily more concerned with their immediate needs and have little time for constant political involvement.

There are also latent fears in the Chicano community of the authorities, be they the police or immigration officials. This is especially true of Chicanos because over 20 per cent of their population consists of non-citizens who face the real fear of deportation without recourse for any action they might take.

Huelga '70 also faced the problems prevalent with any community organizing effort in that the tasks facing them are enormous and they have very limited resources to use in attacking them. These were the problems facing Huelga '70; how well they succeeded will be discussed tomorrow.

EDITORIAL: Recall Grant

THE ISSUE: Why must Dan Grant, who represents Isla Vista on the County Board of Supervisors, be recalled?

From his history of past performance, Dan Grant does not have the best interests of the Isla Vista Community at heart. He has instead catered to the interests of private business groups including property owners and developers.

Probably the most damning case to be made against Grant involves a conflict of interest in the rezoning of property owned partly by Carl Chandler, the manager of Grant's reelection campaign in 1964. Chandler, along with John Harlan are both partners in the ownership of the property which was rezoned for multi-unit dwellings at Grant's request. Both men made monetary contributions to Grant's reelection campaign and the eventual rezoning increased the value of their property 200 per cent.

It is such rezonings which have in the past encouraged "get-rich-quick" land owners and developers to build shoddy and poorly-planned apartment buildings in Isla Vista. However, Grant, who appears to have business interests at the top of his list of priorities, has actively worked against the wishes of the residents of Isla Vista in other ways.

In a letter which he sent to the Isla Vista Community Council and which was published in this newspaper on Nov. 9, he voiced opposition to the formulation of a local "Police Review Board," stating, "I do not believe a 'Police Review Board' would serve any useful purpose." Grant also supported the curfew which was imposed upon the community during last June's riots.

The NEXUS believes that it is time to have a representative to the county who will have the interests of the PEOPLE of Isla Vista as his top priority, not private business interests. We urge all registered voters to sign the Dan Grant recall petitions.

Neglect of the elderly

To the Editor:

The University community has become fully enmeshed in a veritable array of projects ranging from recalling supervisors to determining the shape of the earth. Unfortunately, being eternally preoccupied with the selfish interests of good old "number one," we have succeeded in ignoring a most maligned segment of society.

The plight of the elderly is a saga of tragic neglect. Every minority, every abused, mistreated or forgotten segment is able to produce an articulate spokesman, except the elderly - they're too old.

Think for a minute about a life in which nobody knows that you exist. Alone. Forgotten by family and friends. Nothing to wake up to in the morning except the same four walls (if that). It's not a very enjoyable life if your world is void of other people. Or if statistics are your bag, did you know that as an age group, those over 65 have the highest incidence of poverty in the population? And it doesn't take a social worker to tell you that if you are poor, you are generally alone.

We speak so often of compassion for our fellow man, yet we remain virtually unaffected by the tragedy of our most dependent neighbors. If you feel like giving a part of yourself, the Community Affairs Board is initiating a program of contact with the elderly, and I'm sure they would appreciate your participation. Or, better yet, why not seek out an older person who is alone and visit them on your own? (any church could probably help you out).

The look of appreciation you will receive for your time may become habit-forming. Thank you for reading and for taking the time.

Out of the Closets

BY MICHAEL METTER

Name-calling is kid's stuff, right? Besides, in our "enlightened" campus community name-calling is not considered "cool." It isn't cool to fling around those quaint epithets like "nigger" or "spic" or "kike," even in jest.

I know we are all hoping this kind of bogoted terminology will die out, along with every social injustice which has made a minority group the underdog. But which one of you, as an individual, extends these same sympathies to the gay community?

Hardly any one of you! You're still a name-caller who spits bitter invectives like "faggot," "fairy," "dyke" and "queer." You still snicker at homosexuality like a nine-year-old would snicker at a "nasty" joke. And you probably don't know any more about homosexuality than this same nine-year-old does. Is this why your generously liberal ideology does not include me, or my other gay brothers and sisters?

I think it is time that you opened your eyes and realized that the gay "minority" is in many instances a majority!

There are millions of homosexuals in the United States; at least two million of us in the state of California alone; and probably about 1500 at UCSB. Quick, look around you, one of "us" might be sitting next to you right now! Scared? Do you know that only about 2 per cent of the gay population look "obvious," and you know what that means.

Yes, Virginia, some of your best friends might be gay.

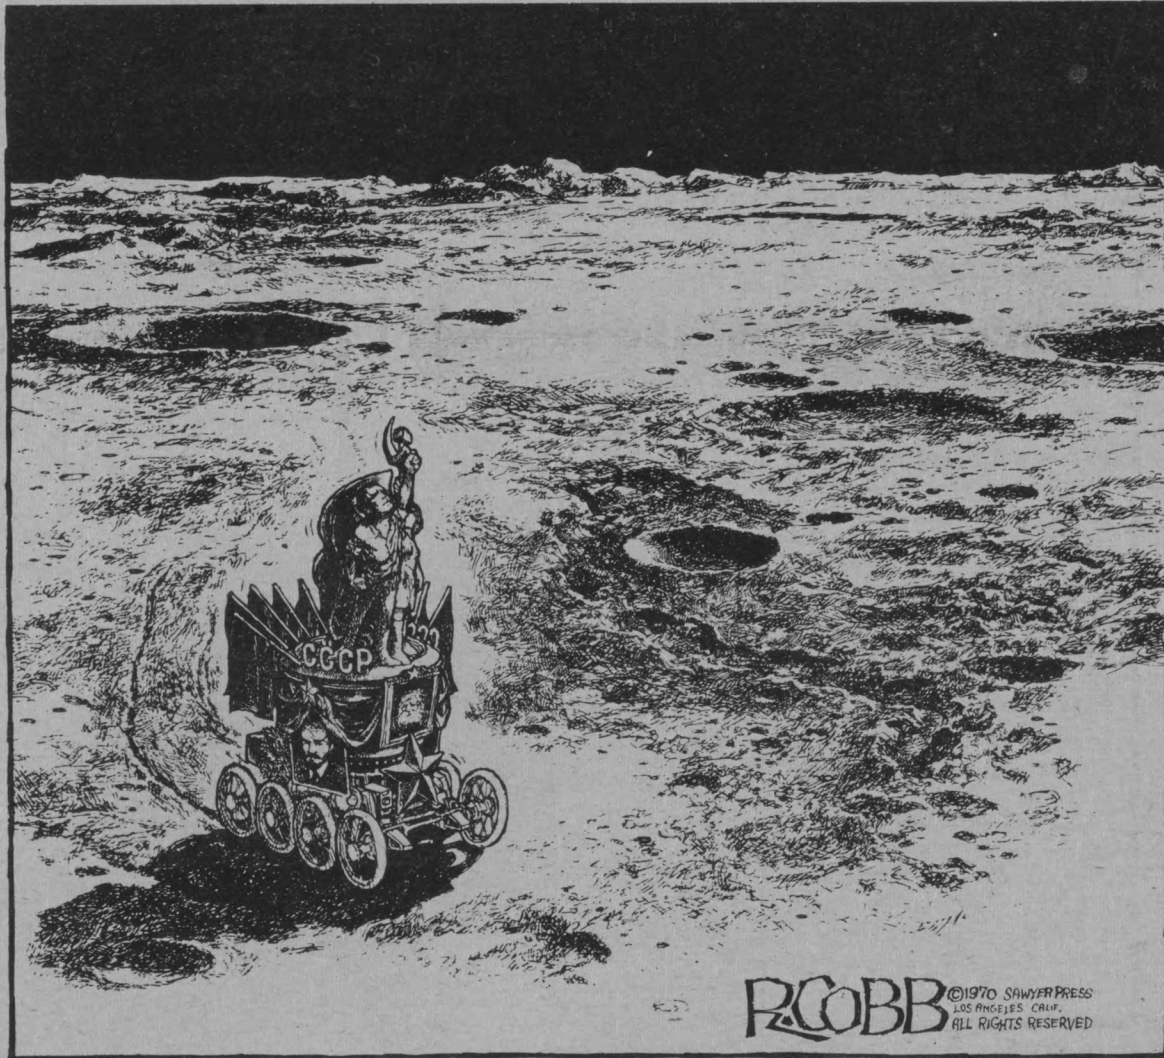

Anyway, now that you are aware that gays exist, and exist in large numbers, I will tell you what is happening. Right now gay liberation is happening. All across the country the Gay Liberation Front is helping gay people realize the nature of their oppression and to do something about it! For the first time we are coming out of our clandestine homosexual worlds; we are demanding, and getting, our rights as citizens and as human beings.

What is Gay Liberation trying to do?—it is trying to change a few of society's old ideas about homosexuals. It is trying to show that the gay lifestyle is an alternative, and at the same time a legitimate and meaningful lifestyle.

Gay Liberation also means telling gay people everywhere that there is nothing to be afraid of anymore, that we are no longer going to be pushed into the shadows.

You are going to start seeing us, more and more of us; like the freedom riders in the deep South. Gay brothers and sisters, we will be expressing love and friendship in our own way; walking down the street holding hands with a person of the same sex, and giving that person a kiss. We are not ashamed, but proud of our sexuality!

So you see, what we are asking is that we simply be allowed to be ourselves and not have to exist as a subculture in a society that does not understand us. We want the society to understand us. If there is a social revolution going on in America, we want to be part of it. We want to be free also.

Handbook: invasion of privacy

To the Editor:

The University of California at Santa Barbara has left itself wide open for a lawsuit concerning the invasion of privacy. I am writing this letter to warn the Administration in the hope that immediate action be taken to correct the situation.

My basic assumption for the possibility of a future lawsuit is that the publication of the Hustler's Handbook is made possible by the giving of private or confidential information by the Administration to the publishers of Hustler's Handbook.

The student never has consented to such a right; therefore, it is an invasion of his privacy, furthermore, the student gave information to the Administration only on the assumption that it would be used for official University connected business.

Upon first hearing and seeing the Hustler's Handbook, I resented the fact that this information was made public (by purchase). One can only too easily see the possibilities, why not a Hustler's Handbook stating personal FACTS (smoker, drinker, medical defects, race or other habits or characteristics).

Over the Thanksgiving weekend I received an unwanted advertisement from Francisco Torres telling of their "program to recycle trash" (probably a bunch of garbage) and other enticements to change my present site of residence. My thoughts wandered to how did the Francisco Torres know I was here, who told them? My only conclusion was that the leak originated from the school's Administration, which obviously deems it proper to give information away when those who gave it are unaware of its future use. Such confidential information is between the Administration and the student, not the Hustler's Handbook or Francisco Torres.

Thomas Jefferson once wrote that "eternal vigilance is the price of liberty." I feel my vigilance is momentarily satisfied, I await the Administration. Recent court precedents may encourage the Administration to act with dispatch.

JERRY VAN EE
Undergrad Poli-Sci

Myriad worlds of fantasy

were dramatically unraveled Nov. 18, at the American premiere of "At Swim-Two-Birds." Flann O'Brien's Irish classic, adapted for the theatre by Audrey Welsh, illustrated to what vivid depths or (as in the case of Sackleroff's set design) heights man's imagination can journey. Not only are the boundaries between illusion and reality comically blurred, if not constantly intermixed, the variety of caricatures, personality comedians and character comedians flashed on and off stage amidst a continuous flow of zestful, Irish wit.

As a satiric fantasy which keeps the audience "on its toes," this production was quite unique, but also quite Irish. Although several efforts were made by the director, Alan Simpson, and the actors to update the play's dialogue and explain the allusions made in Irish jargon, the audience was continually challenged to follow the plot and actions. There were theatrical devices, such as the special-effects slide cartoons, which visually interpreted the gusty, Gaelic colloquialisms. Additional lines of dialogue were also developed in order to explain the frequent references and idiomatic Irish quips to the American audience. Although this challenge in comic theatre was intellectually stimulating, the play remained difficult to follow (specifically in Act I) despite Simpson's admirable attempts to control the regional and cultural depth of O'Brien's story.

Smoky mist unveiled an ethereal, blue-green set which seemed to embody and project into concrete terms the complex structure of "At Swim-Two-Birds" by the use of a multitiered stage. Innumerable rope cords appeared to suspend these various stage platforms in moments of fictional time as if captured within the limitless imagination of the student hero, Bran (Douglas Jacobs). A celestial string quartet mimed the actions of playing instruments and the audience is given its first hint as to the farcical, deceptive flashes of comedy which were later to ensue.

Witty vignettes were often interjected into the madcap sequences of action and emphasized the incongruous nature of these scenes when viewed against the main plot development. Bran, the student novelist, voiced his distaste for pretentious, authoritative people and the egotistic world of academia. Then, a parade of parodies began as Bran depicted a literary world whose characters sprang dynamically onto the stage and allowed him an escape from his dreary existence in the home of his decaying uncle (Chris Bowmen).

Various burlesques on Irish mythology, the American cowboy, good fairies versus bad "pookas" (devils) and on the sex life of an imagined novelist run rampant throughout the play. Due to the difficulty in keeping pace with the demonic directions of Bran's literary imagination, the first act was rather confusing, and yet was paced slower than the following acts. During these next two acts of Irish delight and devilry, the center stage was a melange of mockery as Finn McCool, (Chris Bowmen), King Sweeney, (George DeNobriga), the Pooka MacPhellimey (Sam Woodhouse) and a boozy bunch of fairies, cowpunchers and students all seasoned the heady Irish brew with colorful satires.

Particularly delightful touches of humor were wafted along with the foggy mist in the scenes where the lecherous Furrisky (Richard Bey) bursts out with seductive song and also where Jim Fiolek as a robust "Slug" Willard joins his "pardner," Ted Levatter for shoot-'em-up style mania. The lone female element of "At Swim," Elyn Gersh, played several roles in quick succession. Miss Gersh also displayed an enjoyable talent for character mime as she ambled about from the role of an old maid to that of Sheila Lamont, sexy man-killer. From darkest Hades (and the imagination of author Bran), came one of the surprises of the evening in Sam Woodhouse's entrance as the gentlemanly devil, the Pooka. And for a zany birdman of Irish legend, George DeNobriga's portrayal of King Sweeney was full of feathery animation.

Director Simpson's careful construction and realization of this complex dramatic dream world was evidenced by the control demonstrated among his cast when they engaged in a fantastic flow of humor — from the prosaic poetry of Jem Casey (Scott Templin) to the witty, agile, leering lines of Furriskey. Clever use of microphones and puffs of smoke in such curious places as the Pooka's pocket demonstrated the whereabouts of the Good Fairy (spoken by Susan DeVaux) and added pace to the tempo of the fantasy. Throughout such Irish illustrations of silliness, absurdity, magic and madness one can sense the strong hand of director Alan Simpson as he utilized the fullest potentialities of his cast and theatre in order to imperceptibly push the spectator into the exploration of the worlds of imagination in the human mind.

Godot waiting

Thursday at 5 p.m. at Campbell Hall there will be a production of an original one-act play and a scene from Samuel Beckett's "Waiting for Godot." This dramatic presentation is the prelude to an evening of encounter between students and Santa Barbara citizens sponsored by the Community Affairs Board of UCSB. Called "People to People, an experience in self-awareness," it will feature some fashion of meaningful dialogue between two life styles.

MATRIX, an avant-garde jazz-rock group, will be presented in a special concert setting for two nights only at the Park Theatre, 629 State St., Santa Barbara on Dec. 11 and 12, at 9 each evening.

Flute, woodwind

UCSB's Flute Choir and Woodwind Quintet will present a noon concert Thursday, Dec. 3, in Lotte Lehmann Concert Hall, with Monique Winberg appearing as piano soloist.

Burnett Atkinson, lecturer in music, will conduct the performance of works by Thuille, Poulenc, Reicha and Jonjen.

Weinberger honored at Gridiron banquet

By TOM WALSH
DN Sports Editor

Paul Weinberger, who claims he has been "conspicuous by being inconspicuous" the last four years, received due homage last night at the 1970 UCSB Football Awards Banquet sponsored by the Gridiron Club of Santa Barbara.

PAUL WEINBERGER

Weinberger, who is a senior from Burlingame, played three positions for the Gauchos this past season and went unnoticed for a good part of the time. The "Unsung hero" was especially noted for his exceptional blocking and clutch receiving. On the year, the 6'1", 200 pounder, caught 19 passes, tops on the squad, for 228 yards and a 15.1 average per reception.

For his play throughout his career and this season, the statuesque Lambda Chi Alpha member received the Gaucho Most Valuable Player Award, as well as the Stan Williamson Memorial Award. "It was quite a surprise," he commented, "I really did not expect anything."

Other awards for the Gauchos went to senior Nick Dragich who was honored as the Most Valuable Lineman, linebacker and senior Dennis Ward was cited as the Most Inspirational Gaucho and Mike Ponczocha, a junior, received the Most Improved Player Award.

Senior Steve Vermillion, who rushed himself into the Gaucho record books, was honored as the Most Valuable Back while seniors Paul Thatcher and Joe Nunez were honored as the Gaucho Captains. Senior linebacker Rich Henson a 6', 220 pounder from Glendale, was named the Most Valuable Defensive Players.

"Cactus Jack" Curtice, director of athletics at UCSB, served as Master of Ceremonies and introduced such heralded guests and speakers as Mayors Firestone of Santa Barbara and Hart of Bakersfield, Chancellor Cheadle and Phil Patton, sports editor of the News-Press.

IM playoffs this weekend, women's volleyball tonight

By GERRY CHAMBERLAIN

Unlike professional or college football, intramural football does stop for the rain. Due to the recent storms many games have had to be canceled. In fact the entire Monday game slate, even though the sun came out in the afternoon, was canceled due to the condition of the fields. However, time is getting short and playoff spots are still to be filled so games that are of extreme importance will have to be played. The only thing for sure regarding IM football is that the playoffs will begin this Saturday, Dec. 5. The second round of the playoffs will be played the following day on Sunday, Dec. 6, and then the semifinals on Tuesday, Dec. 8, and the finals on Thursday, Dec.

10. The championship game will hopefully be played once again in the confines of Campus Stadium.

All teams who are, according to the season schedule, supposed to play this week, and all teams who are vying for a playoff spot should continually check with the IM office as to what is happening. Due to the weather, things can change quite quickly so keep in touch.

Women's volleyball playoffs begins tonight at 8 in Robertson Gym. The different teams have been competing in their leagues for a number of weeks now to qualify for playoff berths and, in most instances, are quite proficient in the art of volleyball. Both the quarterfinals and semi-finals will be played tonight with the finals on tap next Wednesday, Dec. 9.

As of right now, the men's intramural cross-country run is on. The race will begin and end at the bottom of the lawn behind the UCen at 10 a.m. Saturday, Dec. 5. All participants are welcome.

NEXT QUARTER

Next quarter is one of the busiest times for the IM department with basketball, soccer, swimming and a number of other sports. Due to the expected large number of entries for basketball, and the limited playing space, interested people should start to think about their team now, and be ready as soon as possible early next quarter. All team managers are urged to come into the IM offices early in the quarter to find out what is going on.

B.R. Baker wins Danish chemistry prize

B. R. Baker, professor of chemistry at UCSB, has been named winner of Denmark's Alfred Benzon Prize for 1970 in recognition of his research in enzyme inhibitors of DNA synthesis.

He and Mrs. Baker have been invited by the Alfred Benzon Foundation to spend the week of Dec. 6 in Copenhagen where Baker will be presented the $5000 prize and will deliver a lecture on Dec. 9 at the Royal Danish School of Pharmacy on "Design of Enzyme Inhibitors."

A banquet in his honor will be held that evening to be attended by the dean of faculty of medicine of the University of Copenhagen, the dean of the Royal Danish Pharmaceutical College and a number of other Danish scientists.

On Dec. 10 a dinner is being given by the Danish Chemistry Society for Baker, to be followed by a special lecture on "Evolution of Neighboring Group Reactions."
