Greetings from The Management

Well, by this point Friday Magazine expects that you are already established into your routine. You know, the cycle of partying, putting off studying, feeling guilty, more partying and on and on until midterms. For the most part we are proud of those of you who managed to stumble onto campus on the first Friday of the quarter to pick up this issue.

This week we took a little look at our ghetto by the sea. A place with a high crime rate, dirty streets, the densest population west of the Mississippi and drunken maniacs who like to wander the streets at night. Let's face it, if this were an inner-city neighborhood they would have armed paratroopers from the National Guard dropped into our little village every weekend. (For those of you who are really curious about how wicked things get, you can call the Sheriff Departments arrest update recording at 964-0223.)

All the same, as wacky and unruly as things can get around here, we still hang in there and even like to brag to our friends back home how this is the coolest place. Around here we're not sure what to make of this place, all we do know is don't drink the water. Have a nice day!

Someone is not paying rent in your apartment and they're eating your food too. But it's okay. They only come out at night and their parties are usually pretty quiet. You know who they are and you better not tell your mom that they are staying for dinner.

As we all know, cockroaches are loathsome, sickening, beady-eyed, garbage-eating insects from Hell. But wait, it gets worse. Most likely your home is host to Blattellae germanicae, commonly called the German Cockroach, the species common to California. The German Cockroach is identifiable by its thin slender body, light brown color, flattened oval head and large, multi-faceted eyes.

First of all, keep them out of your bedroom. P. Rau, who has studied cockroaches extensively, explains one of his cockroach encounters in the book, The Cockroach: "From my own experience ... I was awakened by a tickling sensation on my face only to find a pair of long cockroach antennae playing delicately for sense impressions while the cockroach's extended mouthparts were imbibing moist nutriment from my nostrils."

The cockroach's reputation as the most obnoxious insect known to man is not unwarranted. They are difficult to catch or kill due to their speed and unpredictability.

Good Grief. Good News.

TI designed its advanced scientific calculators to help cut science and engineering problems down to size.

It takes more than an ordinary calculator to help make an extraordinary future scientist or engineer.

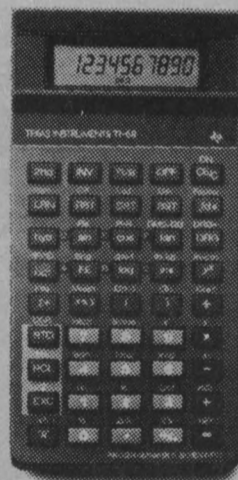

TI's advanced scientific calculators—the TI-60, TI-65 and the TI-95 PROCALC—were designed with all the right scientific mathematical and statistical functions you'll need to get ahead in school and in your career.

These powerful calculators were carefully created to be easy to use. They feature large, color-coded keys and simple keyboard layouts. This helps you concentrate on real problem solving, instead of solving the mysteries of a complex calculator.

With all the demands your advanced courses place on you, you need the help of an advanced scientific calculator from TI.

Copyright © 1988 TI

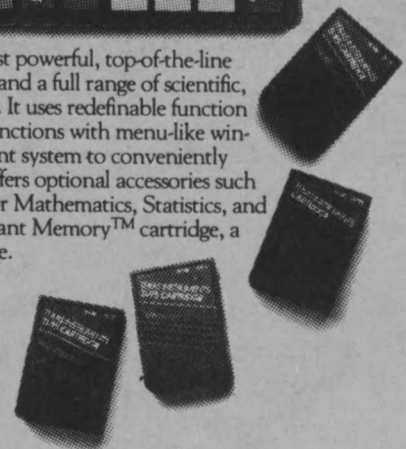

The TI-60 Advanced Scientific Features such built-in functions as hexadecimal/octal conversions, integration using Simpson's rule, statistics (including linear regression), trend line analysis and metric to English conversions. There are also 84 programming steps for repetitive calculations.

The TI-65 Technical Analyst™ Offers all the built-in functions of the TI-60, plus a stopwatch/timer, eight physical constants, decision programming (if...then) capabilities and 100 programming steps for repetitive calculations.

The TI-95 PROCALC™ Our most powerful, top-of-the-line advanced scientific features 8K RAM and a full range of scientific, mathematical and statistical functions. It uses redefinable function keys to provide easy access to 200+ functions with menu-like windows and has a flexible file management system to conveniently store programs and data. The TI-95 offers optional accessories such as Solid State Software™ cartridges for Mathematics, Statistics, and Chemical Engineering, and 8K Constant Memory™ cartridge, a portable printer and a cassette interface.

One hundred and One (or less) ways to Eat Cheap

Eating well on a college budget can be tough.

Sure, McDonald's or Taco Bell is great if you're a Hughes or Rockefeller, but what about the average Joe? Where can he go for a decent meal when the old bank account starts to run low?

Recognizing this dilemma, we at Friday Magazine have compiled a list of inexpensive yet satisfying eating options to keep the epicurean student well-fed during those occasional periods of financial drought.

So often, when faced with the unpleasant spectre of an empty stomach and even emptier wallet, students fail to see the plethora of potential food sources around them. In fact, many don't even consider the most obvious and easily accessible source of all — your roommates' groceries.

Let's face it, the name of the game is survival of the fittest, and if placed in a similar situation your roommate wouldn't think twice before pilfering some of your eggs, bread, butter or cheese. So neither should you. Best of all, when executed in a discreet and subtle fashion, such borrowing can go on undetected almost indefinitely. Total cost: $0.00.

For the more socially active, Santa Barbara's numerous happy hours offer a variety of cuisines for a minimal financial investment. Equipped with a bus pass and a healthy appetite, a student should be able to hit three or four happy hours in a typical evening, sampling everything from sweet and sour chicken, fresh fruits and vegetables to tacos, nachos and tasty little finger sandwiches.

Most bars offering happy hours only card people who are drinking, so this can be a fun way of staying fed for students of all ages. For the cost of a glass of water, which is usually free, a student can feast like a king on the budget of a pauper. Total cost: $0.00.

Finally, taking advantage of UCSB's reputation as a party school, a hungry hunter can on almost any given night find an abundant supply of chips, popcorn, salsa, pretzels and drinks at one of Isla Vista's many parties. Washed down with a good amount of free beer, these festive finger foods can supply you with the same nutrition found in a breakfast of eggs, bacon, milk, toast and juice, without the fancy price tag. Total cost: $0.00.

So you see, there really is no reason to go hungry between relief checks from Mom and Dad when the abundance of free food around us remains for the most part untapped. With a little creativity and a sense of adventure, even the most financially strapped student could stay well-fed year-round.

NOT A REAL AD, OF COURSE

How to Weasel your way through College

Most people come to college with a muddling headful of the remnants of countless pep talks about maturity and whatnot from parents, older siblings and crisp little men named Alan.

We're all told to be responsible, make our financially supportive parents and family proud, and somehow "become older."

The first thing you'll notice about these advisors is that they're all nice, stodgy technocrats who will never, ever have a book written about them. They're people you don't want to be, but will settle for if you don't become a rock star/poet/actor/politician/mogul. They epitomize the creative vacuum of the guppified '80s.

What they don't realize — and what scares them intensely — are the boundless possibilities artistic irresponsibility offers to young, intelligently immature adults in a college setting.

Anybody can be responsible. It takes no real effort to balance a checkbook, pay a bill on time or do the reading for a Psych 1 class. The true genius lies in the folks who can manage to avoid all fiduciary responsibility, yet never be hurting for money while being unemployed. Sound hard? It ain't.

Friday Magazine has interviewed the best of the Sultans of Swindle and we'd like to share some tips with you, before you switch majors from English to engineering.

A good first step is the garnering of an L.A. Times subscription (don't get the News-Press — it sucks). It won't be hard — when a sweaty guy knocks on your door babbling nervously about subscriptions and free books and such, invite him in, sign the paper with a false name (such as Tim Teufel or Ayn Rand) and send him on his way. It'll be about two months before the letters regarding lack of payment will turn nasty, and then maybe two weeks more before a larger man shows up at your door demanding immediate payment. You then tell him that Ayn moved out a month ago but you're interested in subscription, etc. The same works effectively with magazines.

Gas and electric bills are more complex to deal with, but since most of you will be living in the dorms (your first big mistake) this won't affect you. However, the need for serious-spending money will, so you should acquaint yourself immediately with the wonderful South Hall offices of the Financial Aid department.

Student loans, in some ways, are perfect. Hell, you might be dead by the time you have to start paying the things back, so load up all you can. And if you want the quick cash fix, there's always the emergency student loans which will give you up to 500 bucks up front on the understanding that you'll pay it back by the end of the quarter. Of course, what with your mother's surgery and all, money will be pretty tight so you'll just have to make a special appeal. You understand.

If you want to take a walk on the more illegal side, you can take your trusty checkbook, go to I.V. Market (Dave's sucks) and buy $100 or so worth of groceries while having maybe $3 or $4 in your account. Then go immediately home, eat a burrito and call your bank saying that your checkbook has been stolen and you want to stop payment on the one before the binge. You can only do this once in awhile, unless you're crafty enough to switch banks every four months or so. This is highly recommended.

The Associated Students is also a wonderful organization to bilk money from. All you have to do is draft up a complex proposal for the creation of an alternative bi-monthly newspaper or magazine on campus, edited by you, and present this to the appropriate Finance Board committee. They'll be so happy to see competition to the Nexus, they'll quickly set you up with an advisor and a large sum of money (sometimes in the thousands).

From there the key is to look like you're working hard, lie fluently to all involved, and then come back a month or two later saying you spent a lot of time and money, but you just couldn't get it off the ground. Thank them for the experience, and laugh your way to Vegas.

There are obviously a number of things you can do, besides the easy cushion of responsibility. We encourage you to not only use these tips but to develop and create deceptions on your own. If you come up with a real humdinger, come down to the office and share your experience. We're always looking for a few good lies.

direction of movement; their populations can increase to enormous numbers if left undisturbed; they exude a distinct pungent odor; and they defecate upon all food and surfaces with which they come into contact.

To make matters worse, they reproduce like mad, and just one pregnant female can drop up to sixteen nymphs per pregnancy.

The mating ritual of the cockroach is fairly sick, but oddly enough is rather like that of humans. When a male comes into contact with another cockroach, he investigates it with his antennae and if the other insect is a female, they commence rapid stroking of each other's antennae. After groping and becoming properly stimulated, the male twitches the end of his abdomen several times, extends it, and then turns his terminal segments towards her. He then spreads his wings as an invitation to the female to partake of the manly juices which he secretes from dorsal glands. Once the female has positioned herself on his back and has commenced feasting, the male clasps onto her genitalia with his basal hook and pulls her into an end-to-end mating position.

Though copulation occurs more readily in the dark, males can be stimulated in both dark and light. Cockroach sex can last anywhere from a few seconds, where no fertilization occurs, up to a full tiring hour. When the average one-year lifespan of the cockroach is taken into consideration, one hour is a fairly long time (that's about three days to you and me).

Once fertilization has occurred, there is a five-to-13-week maturation period until the nymphs are hatched. The female carries them around until a day or so before they are ready and then deposits the egg sac or keel in a warm safe place, like under your refrigerator.

The nymphs hatch out the following day as tiny, white roaches with big dark eyes. In just a few days, they take on the adult color and almost overnight there are about eight times as many roaches defecating in your kitchen.

Though seemingly impossible to get rid of, there are a few solutions to the cockroach dilemma, like roach motels and boric acid, but shoes and brooms still work best. Or you could just start naming them and keeping them as pets. Good luck.
