Diabetes Clouds Question of Criminal Intent

By Joanna Frazier
Staff Writer

An incident involving a visiting scholar whom officials say was suffering from diabetic complications when he pinned a female staff member to the ground this summer has prompted complex debate over opposing aspects of employees' rights.

The incident behind the charged issue occurred the evening of Aug. 24 when a female staff member left her Broida Hall office to ask if a man peering into her window needed help, according to Campus Police Lt. Antonio Alvarez. When the staff member was returning to her office the man grabbed her and pinned her to the ground, Alvarez said.

When police responded to a 911 call at 5:30 p.m., the female staffer placed her alleged assailant under citizen's arrest on charges of battery, Alvarez said. The man was released on a citation to appear in court on a later date.

Alvarez also added that the charges have since been amended to sexual assault.

Chief Trial Deputy District Attorney Ron Zonen said Monday that his office is still reviewing the case and should be finished late this week.

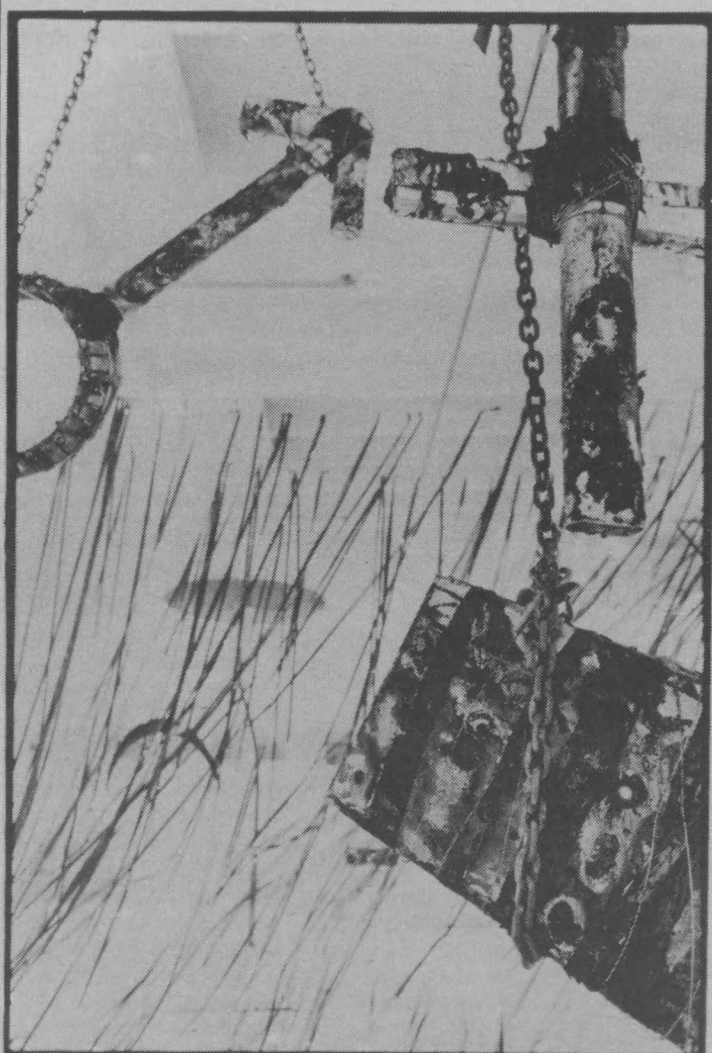

The man accused of sexual assault said on Wednesday that his attorney has advised him not to comment on the incident. The woman pressing the charges has been on a leave of absence, according to co-workers.

At issue is a conflict between the expectation of a safe working environment on the part of female Broida Hall staff members and a belief among others that a medical disability, not criminal intent, was to blame for the incident.

According to Alvarez, the man mentioned that on the night of the arrest complications with his medical condition drove him to attack the woman. "We are consulting a diabetes [specialist] to help us assess the overall nature of what occurred," Alvarez said.

CALPIRG Campaign Director Trish Hendren (right) joins other concerned environmentalists at an endangered species protest in De La Guerra Plaza.

CALPIRG Urges Support for Endangered Species Act with Downtown Tombstones

By Chris George
Staff Writer

Hoping to draw attention to an upcoming congressional vote on renewing the Endangered Species Act, the California Public Interest Research Group held a press conference Wednesday in front of Santa Barbara City Hall.

The half-hour presentation featured seven CALPIRG members who set up mock tombstones naming animals that could be seriously jeopardized by any weakening of the act.

Event spokeswoman Trish Hendren said they hoped to convince members of the community to contact their government officials and express their concern.

"We are urging Santa Barbara to join CALPIRG to urge Senator [Dianne] Feinstein and Representative [Michael] Huffington to co-sponsor ESA in Congress," she said.

"The environment is like a corporation. If you take away a position and you take away another, eventually the corporation will crumble. That will happen with the environment," Hendren said.

Louisiana Representative William Tauzin has introduced legislation he says simultaneously protects natural resources, allows economic growth and respects private property, according to a statement released by his office.

"I am not proposing legislation that will weaken this crucial act. The goal of my legislation is to strengthen species protection," said Tauzin, according to congressional record.

Dave Fineburgh, a candidate for the Santa Barbara City Council, appeared at the presentation expressing support balanced by necessity.

"I'm glad to see people getting involved," Fineburgh said. "I used to be a member of Earth Watch, and I think we need to be good stewards over our own environment, but people are more important than animals."

"It's a complicated issue," he said. "For instance, the Goleta Slough. They want to lengthen the airport runway, which will hurt the slough. But if I'm on an airplane with problems with its landing gear, forget the dumb butterfly. I want a nice long runway. Maybe they could add to the slough."

A.S. Coordinates First Town Hall Meeting

By Lisa Sato
Staff Writer

In an unusual rally to gather students and Isla Vista residents together to promote discussion of university and community issues, a Town Hall Meeting today in I.V. Theater has been called.

Associated Students President Geoff Green initiated the discussion of a Town Hall Meeting to open the lines of communication between campus leaders and the general student body.

The forum will cover specific issues that face the UCSB community, including Halloween policies on live music and parking, the chancellor search and the ramifications of the Smith v. Regents decision, he said, adding that other student group concerns that have surfaced at UCSB will also be addressed.

"The biggest complaint among student leaders and A.S. is that communication is very poor," Green said. "This meeting is an attempt to let everyone know what everyone else is doing. It's important for students to meet and talk about their priorities and concerns."

Although the meeting will be an open discussion, Green said it will attempt to cover the most important issues in the opening in order to make certain that most major concerns are heard.

A.S. Off-Campus Rep Madelon Gibson agreed that students must be aware of the issues that directly affect their lives, and hopes today's turnout will reflect this need.

"There are a lot of pertinent issues students need to be informed about," she said. "We're experimenting with this trial forum to see how much student response and input we can get."

Marisela Marquez, Graduate Students Association internal president, believes in the necessity of the meeting to dispel any misinformation and miscommunication between A.S. and students.

"Geoff's intent is to equalize the amount of info that is disseminated through student groups," Marquez said. "There's a timelag for transmission of information, and there are pockets of information that people grasp onto, and too much time is spent trying to get rid of misinformation."

All students are welcome to attend the forum in I.V. Theater at 5:30 p.m.

O'Connell Calls For Prop. 174's Defeat

SANTA BARBARA (DN) — Local leaders joined state Assemblyman Jack O'Connell on Wednesday to urge voters to support Proposition 170 and oppose the school voucher initiative Proposition 174 on Nov. 2.

"If 174 passes it will mean a step back for education as we know it," said O'Connell, who represents Santa Barbara's 35th Assembly District. "You would see the diplomas coming from our schools not carrying the same weight and respect as they do now."

Prop 174 provides parents with a $2,600 voucher per child to spend at any school they choose, public or private. Prop 170, which was authored by O'Connell, reduces the two-thirds majority that is currently needed to pass school bond issues to a simple majority vote.

Connie Hannah with the Santa Barbara-area League of Women Voters said 46 other states have already passed simple ma-majority measures such as Prop 170. With some 1 million more children expected to join the school ranks by the end of the century, it is no time for California to be lagging behind, she said.

"We'll need to house them somehow," said Hannah. "There's no reason why California should be the most restrictive state."

Goleta Valley School District Superintendent Dick Shelton agreed, saying "[Prop 170 will] put consistency and sanity into facility financing."

Opponents of Prop 170 believe the measure will begin to break down the tax protection provided to homeowners by the 1978 Jarvis-Gann Initiative, Proposition 13.

The property tax initiative, which has been upheld despite challenges in both the California and U.S. Supreme Courts, will not be touched by the school bond measure, O'Connell said.

"It's not a Prop 13 issue," he said. "Prop 13 has been protected ... and 170 doesn't create any new taxes, it just allows local voters greater control over local school bond issues."

O'Connell went on to say that Prop 174 will "clearly be defeated in two weeks."

Prop 174's sponsors agree with state legislative analysts' reports that with a 30% shift of public school students to voucher schools, the state will save $1 billion per year, and as much as $19 billion over the first eight years after passage.

"The unknown factor is the shift," O'Connell said. "The latest surveys I've seen indicate that less than 5% of public school parents intend to shift their children. That's going to cost the state quite a bit."

The analysts said in their report that a shift of less than 10% will cost the state as much as $800 million per year.

Lyle Reynolds, co-chair of the Santa Barbara Public Education Foundation, said a study by his group showed there are about 2,700 private schools in California which, at full capacity, could only absorb an additional 52,000 students if Prop 174 passes.

"That's less than 1% of the kids in public school," he said. "They're never going to get 10%."

Jurors Give Denny Trial Final Verdicts

LOS ANGELES (AP) — With a final verdict of "not guilty," the Reginald Denny beating trial ended Wednesday, leaving a scarred city to face a legacy of racial hostility and doubt about equal justice for Blacks and whites.

Spectators gasped as the court clerk read the verdict by a multiracial jury, whose tortured deliberations left some jurors ill and prolonged the suspense for days.

A second Black defendant walked free after 17 months because the jury deadlocked on the remaining charge against him and a mistrial was declared.

"It's a nice day out today, huh?" Henry Watson said as he left jail.

Defendant Damian Williams clasped his hand to his face and smiled as his acquittal was read.

Williams and Watson were accused of beating Denny and several others when violence broke out April 29, 1992 at the intersection of Florence and Normandie in South Central Los Angeles.

Denny was dragged from his rig and beaten nearly to death while a television camera in a helicopter recorded it. The beating was broadcast live

Prosecutors said Williams was the man on the videotape throwing a brick at Denny's head and dancing in glee. The defense challenged the identification and a prosecution claim that the tape was proof the defendants intended to kill Denny.

Williams, convicted Monday of one felony count of mayhem and four misdemeanor assaults on motorists, faces a possible sentence of eight years in prison. He remained in jail. Sentencing was set for Dec. 7, to be preceded by a hearing on Dec. 1.

Watson was convicted of only one misdemeanor, which has a maximum jail term of six months.

They were acquitted of a total of 14 felony counts.

"Justice is not perfect. It's certainly not perfect in this case," said District Attorney Gil Garcetti. "Perhaps justice is always imperfect."

Edi Faal, Williams' lawyer, said the defendants were widely overcharged.

"From the beginning we felt the individuals charged with assaulting Mr. Denny did so with no specific intent to kill Mr. Denny," he said.

Several States Aim Gun Laws at Youth

DENVER, Co. (AP) — Shayne Gilmore has a question for the 16-year-old who shot him last week.

"I'd just ask him, if he was shooting at me, why? And I'd ask him, why does a guy need a gun? He ruined a lot of things for me," he said.

Gilmore, 18, was a starting linebacker for Englewood High School. That was before he was hit Friday in the foot by a stray bullet during a fight that had nothing to do with him.

Police arrested a gang member and charged him with assault and possession of a handgun. Under a new Colorado law, the arrested boy could be sent to a juvenile detention center for two years on the gun charge.

Following a summer of violence that left four children wounded by stray bullets, Colorado joined a growing number of states responding to juvenile crime with new gun laws aimed at disarming young thugs.

Nineteen states and the District of Columbia have stiff anti-gun laws, and a half-dozen more are considering action. President Bill Clinton said this week he backs a federal proposal making it illegal for minors to possess handguns under most circumstances.

Getting guns away from young people "is definitely the hottest issue in gun policy," said Denise Griffin, a researcher for the National Conference of State Legislatures.

Though gun laws aimed at juveniles may not be the solution to broader problems facing young people, the approach is "one area where we have an emerging consensus we haven't seen before," Griffin said.

Even the National Rifle Assn., which opposes gun control, joined the fight. It helped draft legislation passed in Colorado during a special legislative session on juvenile violence.

Among a package of bills signed by Gov. Roy Romer last month is a law barring people under age 18 from possessing handguns, except for hunting, instruction and target shooting.

Florida has a special legislative session on crime beginning Nov. 1, in the wake of the murder of several foreign tourists. Proposals include banning those under 18 from possessing a gun, except for hunting or marksmanship supervised by an adult. Violators would face five days in jail.

CHARGES: Disability Issue Raised

tural work on the campus, said he knew the man had a history of seizure-related attacks, passing out for several hours one day.

"I knew he had diabetes, and he had several attacks before he passed out here one day, and we thought he had a seizure. He seems to be very normal, and I'm not aware of any incident here. He is very hard-working," Lin said.

According to health care providers, it is possible for diabetes to provoke unexpected results.

Skipping a meal may be one cause of a reaction called "insulin shock," according to the Santa Barbara Sansum Medical Clinic Patient Education Program. The symptoms of this reaction include "confusion and strange behavior, so that the patient may appear to be drunk," according to the group.

The Student Health Center also reported that low blood sugar, or hypoglycemia, may result in odd side effects, including "confusion, abnormal behavior [such as combativeness], convulsions and loss of consciousness."

The incident also points to a broader issue of how far the Americans with Disabilities Act — enacted for the first time in 1992 to prevent job discrimination against people with disabilities — can go to protect workers with mental and physical illnesses when others may no longer feel comfortable on the job.

Because the man is not on the campus payroll he is not considered a UCSB employee, according to the campus Academic Personnel Office.

He is, however, a University of California appointee from his home base UC Santa Cruz, according to Bonnie Sivers, a management services officer in the Institute for Theoretical Physics.

The man has been conducting on-campus research related to the ITP since this summer. It is unclear whether a move to have him restricted from campus activities would violate the Disabilities Act, however.

The ADA — signed into law in 1990 by President George Bush — protects the disabled from discrimination, but makes a provision that an individual may not pose a "direct threat" to the health or safety of others in the workplace.

If the threat can be eliminated by some reasonable means, such as job restructuring or a modified work schedule, an employer has no grounds to discriminate against the employee, the text of the act states.

"If the disability can be controlled with medication, I don't think this can warrant any job disqualification on the part of the employee," said H.G. Prince, a professor and former academic dean at Hastings College of Law.

"What is important to look at is what sort of threat is posed by the disability and to what extent the disability can be controlled," he said. "You can't discriminate on the history of having a disability."

The issue of whether a worker constitutes a "direct threat" to co-workers is paramount in the ADA, according to Linda Kilb, managing director and an attorney for the Disability Rights Education and Defense Fund office in Berkeley.

"There is a legal issue of whether the person is a direct threat. If he is, the law includes the obligation of the employer to make a reasonable accommodation that does not create an undue hardship for the employer," she said.

"With seizure disorders and diabetes, the person may slip into insulin shock. Reasonable accommodations for this may include [the] issue of control of the condition," Kilb said, adding that steps to reduce a threat must be done on an individual basis.

Nevertheless, several workers employed at Broida Hall have indicated that they believe the man's continued presence does endanger their safety.

"I just feel that the system hasn't worked. The victim was so traumatized that there's a lot of fear. I got myself a security system .... It's an alarm that sounds off," said one administrative assistant who

A Place to Belong

After a long thought process, I have decided to get on with the business of being a human being.

Living in this country for several years has made me overly color-conscious. Darker-skinned people of the United States have to spend every chapter in their lives talking, thinking and worrying about color.

If someone has dark skin, they have to constantly regard color. They endlessly wonder if they didn't receive the job of their choice because they have a darker pigmentation of skin. Too many thoughts, ideas and actions rely on color.

But if a dark-skinned person wants to live in America without being naive, and wants to fight for justice, then they will absolutely need to constantly view color.

A Black person would have to be blind not to be constantly concerned with color, not to be constantly searching for a solution.

So many thoughts about color leave no room for the development of other thoughts, no room to know history as it truly existed, no room to begin to think about background cultures.

The United States apparently does not intend to change. The only solution would be to leave America and its foul ways. I suggest relocating to a country in South America where color does not interfere with everyday human life. People's minds can be free to think about whatever they please.

When someone looks at a darker-skinned person in these other countries, they may first notice whether the person has attractive qualities, regardless of how dark they are. People have no need to hide behind their color. Someone can be attractive no matter which features they were given at birth.

Some people have straight hair, some have nappy hair, but those characteristics have nothing to do with who's attractive and who's not.

Consequently, nappy-haired people do not need to separate themselves in these color-blind societies because they can receive the same support and trust from straight-haired people as they can from nappy-haired people.

Furthermore, people who came into this world with nappy hair do not attempt to appear like people with straight hair because everyone accepts their hair in its natural state. To find a Black woman straightening her hair in South America is rare.

Coincidentally, the history of South America is equally as fucked up as the history of North America, with regards to slavery, the slaughtering of the natives and the overall colonialization of the lands.

People do not separate themselves because they have truly achieved the "melting pot." They live together, work together and have children together.

Indeed, these people have mixed together to form one people, but they suffer no loss of cultures, as supporters of the "salad bowl" may argue.

Life should prove to be much different being in a place where people study beauty, thoughts and ideas, rather than the darkness of someone's skin.

Green Fields

A Presidential Update on What's Important

Geoff Green

OUR DEMANDS MUST BE MET!!!! STUDENTS EMPOWERMENT!!!! MOBILIZATION!!!! PROTEST!!!! I realize that these words are catch phrases of sorts, even clichés. However, I also know that they get attention.

As students, we are often labeled as "unreasonable," "out of line" or "out of control" when we mobilize ourselves around a particular issue. This is the common reaction to rallies, marches and the like. However, in light of some recent developments, I believe that it is appropriate to highlight just how effective such forms of expression can be.

In November of last year, a group of students who were concerned about the ways that student fees were being used (among other things) began to organize on four University of California campuses. They called themselves Concerned Students. Here at UCSB, they began to tackle the issue of the library being funded almost entirely by student fees. These students decided that it would be most effective to work in conjunction with elected student leaders, and a partnership (of sorts) was formed.

The position taken by the group was, "If students are going to fund the operation of the library, students must have some say over how and when it operates." This position was expressed through a series of meetings with administrators, and a list of demands was drafted. The process culminated in a series of teach-ins, and ultimately a "library takeover."

The moral of the story is this: IT WORKED. The Library Users Council is about to be formally established to act as an advisory board for library policies (hours, etc.). Now, let me qualify my statement by saying that this council is not what was demanded, nor does it answer all of the concerns that we, as students, expressed. The point is this: PROGRESS WAS MADE.

Another example was last year's proposal to phase out the Physical Activities Program completely over the next two years. The student reaction to this was instantaneous. In addition to the meetings between student leaders, staff and administrators, a rally was held. Some 3,000 students, along with faculty, staff and even Magic Johnson attended to address the potential elimination of the program. Needless to say, the P.A. Department is still with us.

I bring out these two examples to make several points. The first is that large, organized actions by students can be exceedingly effective. Secondly, these events can take place in a peaceful, goal-oriented manner. And finally, there is nothing "out of line" about getting upset and protesting a decision you feel is unjust.

The success of these actions were due in large part to the fact that these issues were approached from two sides. In both cases, large-scale actions were performed in conjunction with diplomatic efforts. It is easy to dismiss angry masses of people as irrational. It is also easy to talk your way out of "diplomatic" negotiations. To do both, however, is not easy. To make progress, both approaches are necessary. Each reinforces the other. By dismissing either method, you only weaken yourself.

At this point I would like to encourage the entire campus community to consider participating in and/or supporting an event of a different sort — "Take Back the Night." This year, TBTN will be a weeklong event beginning Oct. 25 and ending Oct. 28. The theme for the week is that "Safety is a right, not a privilege." Each day there will be opportunities to educate yourself about violence against women and how it is institutionalized in American culture. All of this will culminate in a rally and march on Thursday, Oct. 28 at 6 p.m. in Storke Plaza. Watch for details.

And finally, I must make at least one last plea to all students to make an effort to attend the TOWN HALL MEETING TONIGHT AT 5:30 p.m. in I.V. Theater. We will discuss issues that are pertinent to all of us, and leave with a better understanding of the University, our place in it, and our power to change it for the better. Halloween, the chancellor's search and the Smith v. Regents decision are just a few of the issues to be addressed. Everyone is welcome to bring their own concerns that they would like addressed as well. If for no other reason, come to inform yourself. No one will do it for you.

Geoff Green, a senior environmental studies and biology major, is the Associated Students president for 1993-94.

works on the third floor of Broida Hall where the incident took place.

"There's a fear because it happened just right across the hall," she said.

These views were shared by another physics staff member who works on a different floor of Broida.

"I feel unsafe here and I never have before. My concern is that when I walk at night to my car there could be something out there. I don't know what he looks like, [but] I don't want to be near that guy," she said, adding that a group of the female staffers in Broida Hall have come together to talk about the incident.

At least two Broida Hall staffers now carry alarms with them that they can sound in an emergency, she said.

Colleagues of the man accused, however, say he is a gentle person who has never been prone to violence before.

"He's an extremely nice young man. He's always been very helpful," said Silvers, who works frequently with the man in the ITP.

"The secretaries here are not concerned about having him on campus. We understand this is a concern for the Broida Hall secretaries, but the staff here feel very comfortable with him," she said.

UCSC astrophysics Professor Sandra Faber also offered support. "I considered [him] to be the most gentlemanly and polite person I have ever met. He has a medical problem which probably needs attention, but I don't believe his behavior could be called criminal in any way," she said.

Campus officials have tried to shed light on the situation by educating members of the physics staff about the issues involved. Student Health Center Director Cynthia Bowers, ITP Director James Langer and Amelia Frank from the Office of the Ombudsman were all on hand to hash out some pertinent issues at a September gathering, one staff member said.

CALPIRG

California Senator Barbara Boxer, a Democrat, has co-sponsored the Baucus-Chafee Bill, which calls for the renewal of the Endangered Species Act. In a statement to the press, Boxer's office said roughly one-quarter of the endangered species in the world live in California.

According to Huffington spokeswoman Christine Martin, the Santa Barbara Republican has not yet signed onto the Baucus-Chafee Bill. "There are many Endangered Species Act proposals out there. The congressman is waiting to see which one is coming to the floor."

The Endangered Species Act first passed in 1973 as a way of protecting animals that are in danger of extinction and has gone through several renewals.

"We believe that the [current] ESA has already expired, because it was for fiscal year '92 to '93, which was from September to October," Martin said. "It's very slow moving. We hope to see it this session."

According to Heidi Hill, a college graduate and member of the Massachusetts PIRG, CALPIRG is focused on getting non-student environmental support. "We're a citizen-oriented version of campus CALPIRG," she said.

UCSB Swimming and Diving Enters New Season With New Expectations

Veterans Hoping to Lead a Young Squad to Yet Another Big West Title

By Michael Cadilli
Staff Writer

The UCSB swimming and diving team added 16 new faces this year, which, when combined with last year's large freshman batch, makes this a very young team.

However, this is a team that won the Big West title last season on both the men's and women's sides. For the men, it marked their 15th consecutive title in a row, and for the women, their sixth overall.

"Our performance was great, for half the team were freshmen — and that bodes well for the future," UCSB Head Coach Gregg Wilson said.

Although the swimming performances were strong against UNLV in the Big West Championships, it was the points earned by the diving team that allowed the Gauchos to take the title.

"Without diving we would have lost," Wilson said. "Our divers won it for us."

The Gauchos have six new divers out of 10, but diving coach Mike Lewis indicated that the team has enough experienced people to boast a strong squad.

On the women's diving side, transfer student Melisa Ulmer (junior college state champion) and Erin Evans (two-time regional qualifier) hope to lead the team.

"She [Ulmer] could be one of the best women's divers we've ever had," Lewis said. "And Erin has a ton of experience."

Ted Moore and Rick Alter make up the core of the men's diving squad.

For UCSB's men's swimming team, senior leaders like Bill Sweeney, Glenn Peoples and captain Derigan Silver will have to help the younger players learn to compete at the collegiate level.

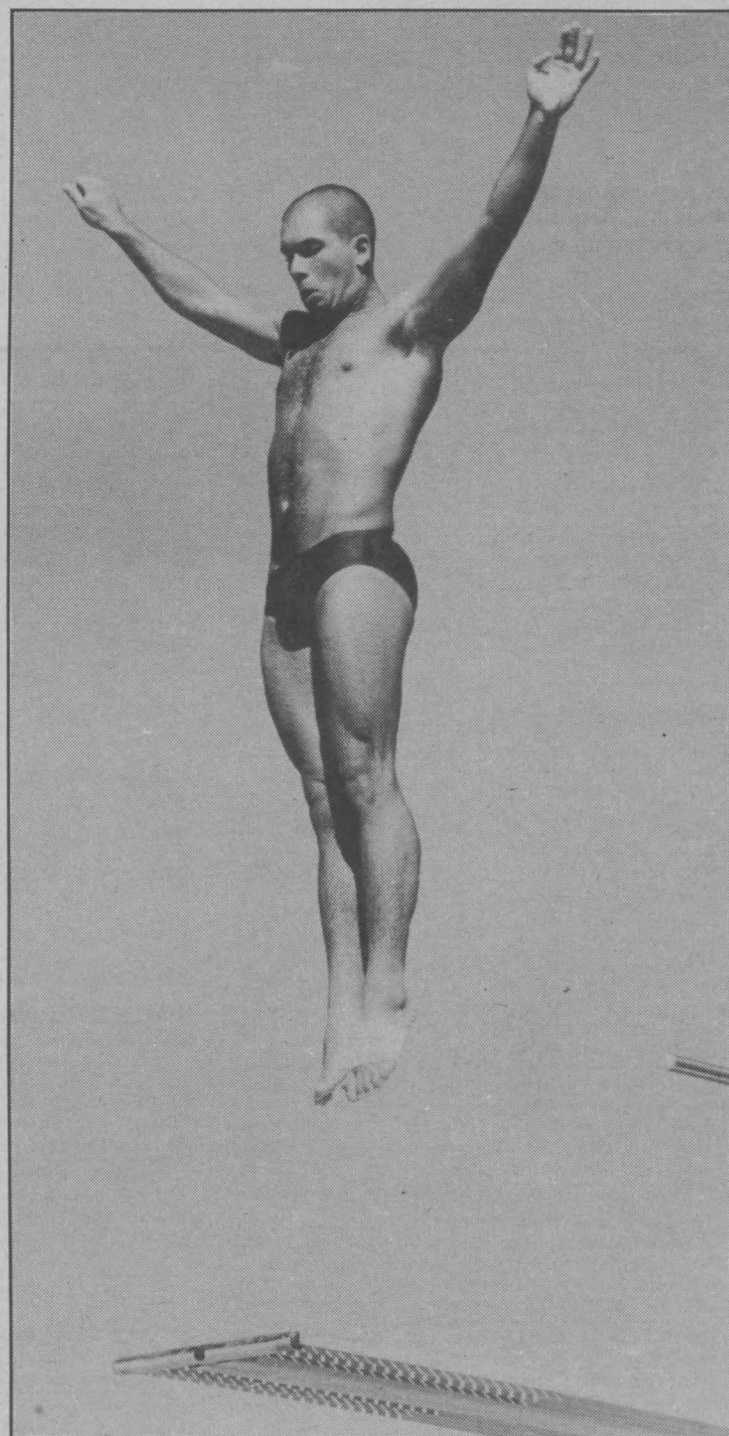

Sweeney is UCSB's strongest sprinter in the 50 meter freestyle, Peoples was second in the NCAAs in the 400 individual medley in 1992, and Silver placed second in the 200 backstroke at the conference championships.

"After this year, we lose leadership and we lose points," Wilson said. "You can't replace leadership, but the younger people learn from them."

For the Gaucha women's swimming squad, Wenke Hansen, Stacey St. Martin, Erin Patrick, Kelli Cornelius, Kendall Lane and Wendy Zellers will provide the backbone for the team. Hansen is a school record holder in three events, while Lane placed third at junior nationals last year.

UCSB takes on USC at noon on Saturday at the campus pool (diving will begin at 10:30 a.m.).

"I never go in thinking we're going to lose — that's defeatist. But it's going to be really hard," Wilson said.

Freshman diver Dove Zimring shows promising form as he catapults himself off of the diving board, hoping for a clean entry.

Gaucha veteran Derigan Silver shows off his butterfly stroke at practice. The senior will be a vital force in the teams attempt at defending their Big West title.

Soccer Squad Attempts to Stop the Toros From Earning Division I Win

By Jason Masini
Staff Writer

UCSB women's soccer Head Coach Tad Bobak knows from past experience what a game against Division II power Cal State Dominguez Hills means — the Gauchos can't afford to lose.

The two teams will lock horns tonight at Harder Stadium at 6:00 p.m., continuing a long history with each other that includes the Toros handing Santa Barbara its first-ever Southern California loss, 1-0, back in 1991.

"They're a very physically fit team, they work very hard, and mark extremely tightly," Bobak said. "There's a rivalry in the past that's very intense. Being a Division II team, they have this advantage that we don't. When they play a Division I team and win, it helps them in the playoff picture and [they] use it as leverage to get them in. They're on the border [of making the playoffs], and a Division I win would help tremendously."

"For us, if we lose it hurts us a lot. If we win, we're supposed to, so it doesn't help. They're in a no-lose situation so it's much more beneficial for them."

Santa Barbara (9-5) is coming off a huge 2-0 win over New Mexico in a game that was scoreless with less than two minutes remaining. Amy Gutowski and Julie Harris were the scorers and will be looked to again tonight to add some scoring punch, which suddenly is a problem again for UCSB.

"I think we kind of came bummed for New Mexico from our loss to Washington [last Friday]," UCSB's Kristen Borland said. "We had worked so hard to get to #5 in the Far West, and we were still angry over the loss. We were supposed to blow them away, but it just didn't happen that way, so we've spent most of the practices this week concentrating on finishing our scoring opportunities and on our defense. We need to connect with each other a little better and use our flow."

The Gauchos are now #6 in the Far West region and only the top four teams make it to the NCAA tournament. Remaining games against #5-ranked Colorado College on Sunday, #1-ranked UC Berkeley and #3-ranked Santa Clara should decide who will go and who won't. A loss to the Toros would all but dash any hopes of the post-season.

Dominguez Hills does have potent offensive threats that can put the ball in the net. Teresa Bateman has 26 points (10 goals, 6 assists), Gwen Nakashima 20 points (7,6), and Anna Klein 14 points (5,4). Joanna Enserro has seen the most action in goal for the Toros and has a 1.29 goals-against average.

For Santa Barbara, senior captain Phronsie Franco leads the team in scoring with 17 points (5,7) and Gutowski is next with 12 points (5,2). Senior goalkeeper Amy Goodwin has been stellar in-between the posts with a 0.97 GAA.

"We have to come out prepared, as if it's the most important game we've played all season," Bobak said. "We must be committed to coming out and playing the toughest match we're capable of."

then it picked up to 12 mph and continued to build."

The frosh-soph Gaucha sailing team entered four boats into the Pacific Coast Intercollegiate Yacht Racing Association frosh-soph regatta just east of Stearns Wharf last weekend.

The other colleges entering the regatta included Berkeley, UCI, USC and SDSU. Irvine, which only entered one boat, finished first with 47 points.

Santa Barbara's frosh-soph team is relatively inexperienced. However, UCSB posted a fourth-place boat piloted by Josh Frank.

"The skipper [Frank] and I were new working together," crew member Kyrá Goldsmith said. "I really didn't know what to expect."

The other Gaucha boats finished 10th, 11th and 12th, respectively.

According to team captain Mike Stephenson, the conditions of the race were good for UCSB.

"On Saturday there were really, really light winds early and

The UCSB women's field hockey team lost to Cal last weekend 2-0 at Harder Stadium, leaving the Gauchos with a record of 1-2.

"It was a fairly even game," UCSB Head Coach Bill Davidson said. "Portions went our way."

The Gauchos only have two returning players from last year, and admit that they are not a dominating team this year.

"We did lose a lot of players this year, but we have a lot of potential for next year," forward Stacey Polonchak said.

"The team only has fifteen members, and can usually only get ten players together for any given game," captain Rachel Hierholzer said. "But for the most part, we're doing well."

Next weekend UCSB will head up to Berkeley for The California Invitational Tournament, which will include UOP, Stanford, Cal and Simon Fraser — a team from Canada.
