Flyers Posted Over Campus Lambasting Provost, Chancellor For Alleged Sexism

By Shira Gotshalk Staff Writer

Flyers slamming College of Letters and Science Provost David Sprecher for allegedly exploiting female members of his staff peppered campus

The flyers were found posted in various places around campus on Monday, including Storke Plaza, the University Center and the Arbor.

The posters follow on the heels of the discovery that Sprecher was forced to leave his post because of repeated romantic entanglements with mem-

One of the posters contained a picture of a naked man with Sprecher's head pasted on it, saying, "EXPLOIT THIS MAN." A second flyer showed a woman's nude torso with the words: THIS IS HOW YOUR PROVOST SEES YOU, next to a photocopy of Barbara Uehling's face with the words, "AND YOUR CHANCELLOR DOESN'T CARE."

Although no one has claimed responsibility for the flyers, Shamiran Samano, a member of Associated Students Student Lobby, said she knew who made them. "It was a small core of people, but I think that they spoke for a lot of people," she said.

The recent crop of posters follows a flyer, distributed several weeks ago, that encouraged women graduating this year to "Say no to a graduation in front of these hypocrites." The flyer featured pictures of Uehling, Sprecher and Vice Chancellor of Academic Affairs Gordon Hammes next to a Daily Nexus story exposing Sprecher's sexual indiscretions.

Samano said she was unaware of any correlation between the first batch of flyers and the current ones, refusing to divulge any other information regarding the ones found yesterday.

Monday morning, Sprecher and members of his staff were still unaware of the new flyers. Sprecher refused to comment until he had examined the posters and later said all questions must be directed to his attorney, James Hurley Jr., who was unavailable for comment.

Neither Uehling nor Hammes could be reached

These two flyers, protesting alleged sexism in the administration, caused quite a stir when they turned up across campus Monday.

Administrative Assistant for CLS Phyllis Gibson said she personally found the posters "kind of amusing," but added on a more serious note that she is upset and amazed that the administration has not reacted to the Sprecher incident. His actions maligned the CLS working environment over a period of several years, she said.

The CLS staff has taken a lot of intense heat and we shouldn't have to. This should have been directly dealt with when it came out," she said. There hasn't been any dialogue at all, it's just been life as usual."

A CLS staff member, who spoke under the condition of anonymity, disagreed with Gibson, saying the brouhaha has not affected office morale. "The whole incident reflects more upwards, not downwards on those of us in peon jobs.'

She did agree that the administration needs to explain why the incident has been covered up. "Why wasn't it dealt with straight up when it was uncovered?" she asked.

Dissident's Dreams For China's Freedom Alive

Activism Survives Government's Crackdowns

By Dorothy Merifield Staff Writer

Nearly two years after the Tiananmen Square massacre rocked his homeland, Chinese dissident and astrophysicist Fang Lizhi predicted a long struggle for the pro-democracy movement in his country during a lecture Monday night in Campbell Hall.

"The road to Chinese democracy has been long and difficult, and will continue to be for a number of years to come," Fang told the crowd of 500 during his hourlong talk.

While the Chinese government's violent crackdown on student activists has forced the democracy movement underground, Fang assured his listeners that the movement is still alive. "It is not dead, the energy is still there," he said. Focusing on the government's problems of wanting to modernize China within a socialistic dictatorship, Fang discussed the inconsistencies within the Chinese Communist Party itself. "Sometimes it has made steps forward, other times backwards," he said.

Steps forward included more freedom of speech for intellectuals as an attempt by the govern-ment to gain support from academics and artists, while steps backward, of course, include the massacre of several thousand students in Tiananmen Square on June 6, 1989.

According to Fang, the Chinese government's schizophrenia is a result of its desire to bring the technology of democratic nations to China without the democratic values. "China likes science but not scientists," he said. "The gov-ernment fears that if people be-

Oil Spill Off Ventura Coast Puts 2,000 Gallons Into Sea

By Jan Hines Staff Writer

Just one day after federal legislation banning oil drilling off local coastlines landed in the U.S. Congress, roughly 2,000 gallons of crude oil poured from a sea floor pipeline into the waters off Ventura County shores Friday.

Although the spill did little damage to the surrounding mar-ine environment, it highlighted the need for legislation to prevent such spills off Santa Barbara and Ventura County coasts. Curently, these areas are the only Caifornia coastal zones where oil companies can purchase oil leases.

The proposal, introduced by Congressman Bob Lagomarsino

Winnie Mandela Convicted On Kidnap, Assault Charges

JOHANNESBURG, South Africa (AP) — Winnie Mandela, the wife of African National Congress leader Nelson Mandela, was found guilty Monday of kidnapping and accessory-to-assault charges following a complex and politically charged trial. Mrs. Mandela, 56, looked shocked when the verdict was read. Her husband rushed to embrace her and the two made defiant clenched-fist salutes to a cheering crowd as they left the courthouse.

Mrs. Mandela and her two co-defendants had proclaimed their innocence in the 1988 abduction and beating of four youths in the Black township of Soweto, but the judge, in a scathing verdict, called Mrs. Mandela an "unblushing liar."

The judge also found both of Mrs. Mandela's co-defendants guilty of kidnapping and one was convicted of assault. In South Africa, the verdict is decided by the

The judge ordered the defendants to appear in court Tuesday, when sentencing was expected. They could face any thing from suspended sentences to lengthy jail terms.

The defendants had plead innocent Feb. 11 to four counts of kidnapping and four counts of assault.

Truck Carrying Limestone, Teen-Agers Flips, Killing 35

RIO DE JANEIRO, Brazil (AP) — A truck carrying limestone and 66 teen-agers hitchhiking home from a weekend festival flipped over on a curve of a highway in northeastern Brazil, killing 35 of the youngsters, police said Monday.

The driver ran off the road near Conquista da Vitoria, a city 750 miles north of Rio, at about 6 a.m. Sunday after he apparently fell asleep at the wheel, said state trooper Car-

The driver, who suffered minor injuries, is in police custody, Gomes said.

The truck was bound from Aracaju to Sao Paulo, 900 miles away, when the driver picked up the teen-agers outside the rural town of Barra do Choca, Gomes said.

Thirty-three victims were crushed to death under the limestone, Gomes said. Two more died on the way to the hospital and 21 others were hospitalized in serious

U.S. Troops, Copters Arrive In Bangladesh to Aid Relief

DHAKA, Bangladesh (AP) — Growing numbers of U.S. troops, many en route home following action in the Persian Gulf, arrived Monday to help with the cyclonerelief effort, bringing helicopters desperately needed to ferry supplies to storm survivors.

Millions of people are threatened by sickness, hunger and exposure in the wake of the April 30 cyclone that killed more than 139,000 people. Most of the victims lived on low-lying islands and in coastal villages swamped by 20-foot waves whipped up by 145 mph winds.

Compounding Bangladesh's misery, bad weather threatened other parts of the country on Monday.

The U.S. relief effort got under way in earnest on Monday as a giant U.S. Air Force C-5 Galaxy transport plane brought in five U.S. Army UH-60 Blackhawk helicopters and 73 Navy, Army and Air Force personnel — mostly Blackhawk flight crews and medical teams.

Altogether, more than 12,000 U.S. troops - including Persian Gulf veterans — are to contribute to the international effort to save storm survivors.

Souter Casts Deciding Vote In Case Regarding Arrests

WASHINGTON (AP) — Someone arrested by police without a warrant generally can be kept in jail up to 48 hours before a court determines whether the arrest was valid, a deeply divided Supreme Court ruled Monday in a case from Riverside County, Calif.

By a 5-4 vote, the court said a 48-hour wait for such a hearing is constitutional.

The vote of Justice David H. Souter, the court's newest member, proved the tie-breaker.

"Some delays are inevitable," Justice Sandra Day O'Connor wrote for the court. "In our view, the Fourth Amendment permits a reasonable postponement ... while the police cope with the everyday problems of processing suspects through an overly burdened criminal justice

The decision sent back to a federal appeals court a civil rights lawsuit against Riverside County by Donald Lee McLaughlin. He sued in 1987 to challenge the county's policy on providing probable-cause hearings.

The county provided such hearings within 48 hours, excluding weekends and holidays.

Out of Court Settlement Is Reached in Tylenol Deaths

CHICAGO (AP) — The families of seven people who died after taking cyanide-laced Tylenol reached a settlement with the drug's manufacturer just as the case was going to trial, the judge said Monday.

The settlement with McNeil Consumer Products Inc. was reached as jury selection was scheduled to begin.

No details were immediately released by Cook County Circuit Court Judge Warren Wolfson, who announced the settlement after conferring with attorneys.

The lawsuit, filed in 1983, alleged that McNeil should have known its Tylenol capsules could be tampered with and should have acted to protect consumers.

The seven died after taking Tylenol capsules that had been laced with poison. No one has ever been charged in

James W. Lewis, convicted in 1984 of trying to extort $1 million from Johnson & Johnson, McNeil's parent company, and now serving two consecutive 10-year sentences at the federal penitentiary in Leavenworth, Kan., remains the prime suspect in the deaths, state police said.

Sightseeing Plane Crashes at Grand Canyon, Kills Seven

GRAND CANYON, Ariz. (AP) — A sightseeing plane crashed and burned Monday on a plateau near the Grand Canyon, killing all seven people aboard, authorities said.

The single-engine Cessna 207 crashed in Kaibab Naonal Forest about four miles south of the canvon rim said Bill Pribil, chief Coconino County sheriff's deputy. He said the pilot and six other people died.

A National Park Service helicopter pilot found the wreckage about 10 miles east of Grand Canyon Village while checking a reported forest fire, Pribil said. The crash apparently occurred about 1:30 p.m., he said.

The flight was a sightseeing trip originating at Grand Canyon airport in Tusayan, about 12 miles south of Grand Canyon Village, Pribil said. He said Air Grand Canyon, a charter service based in Prescott, operated the aircraft.

The plane crashed in an area where the National Park service had let a lumber company clear-cut.

Landon Mad at Speculation About Possible Early Death

LOS ANGELES (AP) — "Highway to Heaven" star Michael Landon is angered by published reports that he soon will succumb to his pancreatic cancer, his doctor said

"It angers me to have people establishing a prognosis for Michael, people who have never seen him and are unfamiliar with his treatment," said Dr. Cary Presant, chairman of the Los Angels Oncologic Institute at St. Vincent Medical Center.

"It also angers Michael. He's expressed that to me." Presant was referring to published speculation that Landon could die within weeks. He did not cite specific

"Certainly he has a very serious disease, but he's receiving cutting edge, state of the art treatments," Presant told a news conference.

Presant and Dr. Charles Wiseman, chief of the institute's cancer chemotherapy program, refused to give a prognosis. The actor was diagnosed with pancreatic cancer in early April.

"I don't think that you can estimate how long an individual is going to live and I think it's unfair to tell a patient, 'You're going to live this long or that long,'" Presant said.

Former Foothill Cop Pleads Innocent to Beating Charges

LOS ANGELES (AP) — A former member of the Police Department's troubled Foothill Division pleaded innocent Monday to charges filed after the beating of two homeless men.

Laurence Braun, 42, a 21-year police veteran who retired four days before prosecutors charged him, entered the plea to two felony counts of using excessive force under color of authority.

Municipal Judge William Chidsey allowed Braun to remain free on $5,000 bail pending a May 30 preliminary

Court Rules States Can Let Federal Felons Possess Guns

SAN FRANCISCO (AP) - A federal felon whose civil rights have been restored by a state after completion of a prison sentence can possess a gun, a federal appeals court

The ruling by the 9th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals, the terpretation to a 1986 federal law allowing states to decide when certain former felons may have guns.

Federal law makes it a crime for someone who has been convicted of a state or federal felony to possess a gun. But the 1986 law says gun possession is legal if a state has erased the previous conviction under its own laws, granted a pardon or restored the felon's civil rights.

A state cannot erase or pardon a federal conviction. But in a 2-1 decision, the appeals court said an Arizona law, automatically restoring the civil rights of first-offense felons after completion of their prison sentence, covered federal felons.

Legal Pot? May Be on 1992 Ballot If Drive Gets Enough Signatures

By Anita Miralle Reporter

The longstanding debate over legalizing marijuana may finally be decided by California voters on the November 1992 ballot if pro-hemp advocates manage to collect 550,000 signatures by June 15.

A campus chapter of the statewide organization Help End Marijuana Prohibition sprang up at UCSB earlier this year and is now soliciting the John Hancocks of UCSB students in order to land the initiative on next year's ballot.

While those such as John Goldman, one of the first student members of the fledgling campus H.E.M.P. chapter, focus on the utilitarian aspects of the hemp plant and downplay the drug's recreational function, opponents cite the health hazards posed by using marijuana.

"We are not advocating the use of marijuana as a drug, only the freedom to have hemp available to the public without government involvement," he said.

According to Goldman, hemp grows abundantly in most climates and soils, and is made up of long, strong fibers which can be used to produce long-lasting products resistant to decay.

One acre of marijuana can produce the same volume of resources equivalent to 4.1 acres of trees, Goldman said, claiming that if hemp were used instead of trees for paper and textiles, the pace of deforestation could be slowed.

In addition, the hemp seed can be used to produce a type of fuel which only emits carbon dioxide when burned. "If marijuana fuel replaced the sulphur- and methanol-releasing fossil fuel, the percentage of smog we breathe in daily would be cut down," Goldman said.

Besides its environmental uses, the plant has potential in treating such medical problems as glaucoma, asthma, insomnia, epilepsy, headaches, menstrual cramps, and the nausea and vomiting associated with cancer chemotherapy, Cottage Hospital Pharmacist Bruce Reed said.

However, there are also several health reasons for not smoking marijuana, according to Phylis Wakefield, assistant coordinator of Student Health Service's Alcohol/Drug Awareness Program.

Marijuana is known to cause temporary impairment of the immune system and a drop in the body's growth and development hormones, and can negatively affect sperm production and menstrual cycles. "Pot can also decrease testosterone levels in the body resulting in less orgasms in women, and difficulty having erections for men," Wakefield said.

Short-term memory problems, loss of concentration and perception, irregular sleep patterns, and increased appetite are temporary effects of marijuana, while changes in personality, behavior and emotional development are the results of long-term usage, according to Wakefield.

long-term usage, according to Wakefield.
Contrary to popular belief, studies show that marijuana smokers may develop psychological addictions to the drug. "Heavy users develop a tolerance, believe they need pot in order to relax or get through the day, and go through withdrawal symptoms when they quit," Wakefield said.

If marijuana is legalized, Wakefield believes problems similar to those which plague alcohol use will emerge. "The social problems will be much less dramatic since the majority of people don't get stoned as often as they drink, but there will be addiction occurring," she said.

However, Goldman argued that if marijuana were legal, it would be regulated much as alcohol and cigarettes are now.

Alternative Graduation Offers Choice

By John Henry Binder Reporter

When many graduating seniors flip their tassels and bid adieu to UCSB next month, they may be doing so at an alternative graduation ceremony in Isla Vista.

More than 200 students have already pledged to join in the June 15 Alternative Commencement Service, which will be held in Anisq' Oyo' Park, organizers said. Touted as a "dignified ceremony," the event will include UCSB faculty and a keynote speaker.

The ceremony is the work of graduating seniors Karen Zapata and Carla Lease, who cite "the hypocrisy of this institution," as the motivation behind the event.

"It is ridiculous to go through their ceremony when we are at odds with what (administrators) stand for," Lease said. "A big focus of this school has been the pledge to diversity, yet the budget cutbacks and the fee increases will definitely affect students of color."

A flyer for the ceremony also targets university ties to the nuclear weapons labs as a reason to attend the alternative graduation.

"As I graduate, I want to take more control," said senior Rafferty Atha, a history major who will take part in the alternative graduation instead of the conventional rite. "I've had to play by their rules the entire time, and by doing this, it will make me feel better about my graduation from here," she added.

"These are people who share the same political views, as well as issues on human rights," said Claudine Michelle, a Black studies professor who was asked to attend the commencement. "They have tried to achieve a number of goals over the years and this is a smaller setting for them to come together and celebrate their Campus Activities Center Director Naomi Johnson, who heads the university's commencement ceremonies, said she has no problem with the alternative graduation, but added, "however, if someone tries to disrupt the graduation with negative intentions, then that's where I have a problem.

The conventional ceremonies will take place on the faculty club lawn over a three-day period in which 3,400 students will receive their diplomas.

In contrast to the official ceremony, the alternative service will not have a $45 fee attached, far fewer students will be present and Chancellor Barbara Uehling is not scheduled to attend.

The only time conflict will be between the alternative commencement and the College of Engineering ceremony, both of which will take place from noon to 3 p.m. on June 15.

In an attempt to avoid hostilities with campus officials, alternative graduation organizers are making it clear that they are not asking students to boycott conventional ceremonies. "They can do both," Lease said. "We aren't asking people to boycott the regular ceremony, but if they want to, that's cool."

Seniors can register for the alternative graduation by telephone or in person at the Associated Students Student Lobby office on the third floor of the University

Free Tests Offered For Tay Sachs Gene Carriers

Because hundreds of thousands of Americans unknowingly carry the gene causing the fatal disease Tay Sachs, volunteers will be offering free testing for the disorder on campus today and Wednesday.

Carriers of the Tay Sachs gene often "are perfectly healthy," said Theresa Mangan of the California Tay Sachs Disease Prevention Program, which will be conducting the testing. "Most families have no history, so many people do not feel there is a reason to be tested," she added.

If both parents are carriers, there is a 25 percent chance that their child will inherit the disease. A Tay Sachs baby appears healthy at birth, but begins to show signs of the disease at six to eight months. The disease proves fatal three to five years after the child develops symptoms such as blindness, mental retardation, seizures, an inability to swallow and vegetation.

The only "cure" for Tay Sachs is prevention. "(Now) is a good age to test people, before they begin having children and planning families," said Justine Kyckelhahn of the Community Affairs Board.

"It is a good opportunity to reach so many people," she said, adding that the gene is found in disproportionately high numbers in the Jewish population, where one in 27 people are carriers.

Testing is only available through specialized Tay Sachs programs, and is 100 percent effective. The free blood test normally costs $65 and will be available today at the Santa Cruz Residence Hall from 5 to 7 p.m., and both today and tomorrow in the UCen Pavilion from 10 a.m. to 2 p.m.

Presidential Candidate Seeks Economic Justice

By Kenneth Klein Reporter

Third-party presidential candidate Ron Daniels discussed the problems of racism and the need for a new political vision in his pitch for the presidency Monday at the MultiCultural Center.

Approximately 40 students, faculty and staff members attended Daniels' lecture, "The Resurgence Of Racism In America," sponsored by the Center for Black Studies.

"Racism has been used as a strategy to divide. Racism has become too deeply ingrained in American society. We cannot build a democracy until we face our history," he said.

Daniels said his role as an independent candidate in 1992 "will be to pose the vital alternative to the Democratic and Republican parties as a means of building a movement and institution to fight for a socially responsible economy in the United States." A 50 percent reduction in total military spending, a war tax on the rich to pay for the Persian Gulf War, and a fair system to eliminate tax breaks for the wealthy are part of Daniels' presidential platform. He also supports a host of economic and social measures to remedy inequality in many problem areas facing the country.

The lecture was well received by the majority of those in attendance. "This is a very worthwhile lecture to attend for students," Black Studies Chair Gerald Horne said. "Fees, bus fares, taxes and even your lunch is going to cost more. Perhaps the time for a third-party candidate has come."

"He brought to light issues that have not been talked about much. Daniels is for the cause of social justice," senior math major Carlos Pile said.

"Daniels raised a lot of interesting issues. One of them on my mind is how a lack of education promotes racism," said Sue Fallica, a medical assistant at Student Health Services

Sex, Drugs and Stress the Focus of Class Series

By John Morrissey Staff Writer

Relationships, alcohol and drugs, and poor nutrition — often contributing factors to stress and academic probation — are the subject of a yearly class series, Sociology 91A-D, and provide a segue into the Sociology 191 peer education classes.

The classes, each of which focuses on one aspect of stress, generally enroll 30 to 40 people, most of whom want to be peer educators, Judy Hearsum of the Alcohol and Drug Awareness Program said.

In addition, "This class teaches people to do lectures on AIDS, sex, relationships, eating disorders "Whatever I do — as stressful a world as it is — I'll be able to deal with it."

and so on," Health Education Director and sociology Lecturer Sabina White said. But many Soc 91 students take the class simply because they are interested in learning to manage their own stress.

"Whatever I do — as stressful a world as it is — I'll be able to deal with it," sophomore business economics major Eric Cheung said.

"It's easy to let stress get a hold of you," said junior business economics major Jennifer Hoyt. "I had heard about the peer program, and I wanted to get involved."

"Stress has a lot to do with everything," senior communications major Sheila McCallum added. "Instead of crisis intervention, this is prevention."

The classes are made up of a series of presentations on different topics. Hearsum's lecture, "Is There a Quick Fix for Stress?", questioned the long-term effects of using alcohol as short-term relief from stress. She said all the beneficial effects of alcohol can be obtained without drinking.

"When people are under the influence of alcohol, they lose their inhibitions," Hearsum said. "We let our hair down. We did weird things without being drunk. We played games and had improvisational theater with structured role-playing."

The presentations focus more on student interactive activities than on lectures. "That's what's good about this class," Hoyt said. "You learn by participating, not interactive and the said."

"I'm a cowboy. On a steel horse I ride. And I'm wanted, wanted - dead or alive."

So what if Bon Jovi sang those lines. So the words of a rock band have little relevance within the chambers of the state capitol. So few legislators in Sacramento have ever experienced the thrill of sitting astraddle a loud hog, with the wind whipping around their hair. Yes, the wind whipping around their hair.

If state legislators have their way, motorcyclists will no longer be able to have such an experience in California. After four years of heated debate, it looks like a measure mandating cyclists to wear helmets will gain gubernatorial approval. And bikers from Crescent City to Chula Vista are mad as

Wearing a helmet is certainly the safe and sane thing to do when riding a motorcycle. Hundreds of lives would probably be saved if it were mandatory to do so. But lives would also be saved if it were against the law to smoke or drink, if it were illegal to hang glide, parachute or scuba dive. Lives would also be saved if it were illegal to drive a car, or to fly. Countless lives each year would be saved if people weren't allowed to eat red meat or enjoy that extra slice of cheesecake. If the government really wanted to, they could mandate that everyone must exercise everyday in order to lengthen national life expectancy.

The point, however, is that it would be ridiculous to do so. The citizens of this nation would revolt if the government started dictating exactly what people must do, or not do, based only on what is for their protection. There are some rules of safety that must be respected, like the stringent drunk-driving laws, for example, but most of these laws limit a person's potential to do harm to another person. It is contrary to the laws of a democratic country to set up rules about what a person must do for their own safety. It is undemocratic to outlaw freedom of choice.

Motorcyclists know they take a risk by not wearing a helmet. But they take a risk by choosing to ride a motorcycle — and the appeal of such risk is often behind the rationale for such decisions. Parachuters, bungee jumpers, downhill skiers — participants in all these activities take risks too, and it could be that this thrill is what draws people to such activities. No one is forcing them to take a risk, it is all a matter of individual choice.

Motorcycles, for many riders, are more than just a mode of transportation; they are a lifestyle, an entire life philosophy. If Governor Wilson does in fact sign this law, the state will have a hell of a time enforcing it. Those bikers avowedly against the law now have sworn to protest it. The fact that many have firmly voiced opposition to the measure seems to have reinforced the notion in Sacramento that bikers are an outlaw breed who need legislative paternalism telling them how to live. If the state were trying to implement a law on a more influential constituency, you can bet it wouldn't get far. But since motorcyclists are seen in many circles as lawless louts, their arguments are scarcely

There are many cyclists who choose to wear a helmet because they believe it to be the safe thing to do. But there are others who don't because they question this argument, or are simply against the helmets. The important thing, however, is that it is their choice — and that is how it should be.

Lurking in virtually every part of our environment — our homes, our food, our water and our air pesticides claim the lives and wellbeing of many people. With the rise in the use of pesticides in the United States, which has tripled to over 2 billion pounds a year since the 1960s, we can expect the number of people affected by pesticides to rise significantly.

Therefore, the more you know about pesticides, the safer you will be from the harm they bring. Every day of this week from 10 a.m. to 2 p.m. in front of the UCen, the California Public Interest Research Group, as a part of Earth Awareness Week, will address the problems of pesticides and how they affect us.

In conjunction with the activities taking place this week, one of our goals is to alert people to how the overall use of pesticides affects our daily lives. After all, we are what we eat, right? If so, we are walking pesticides by now. Presently, 750 active pesticide ingredients are on the market, and 44 of those used in California are known to cause cancer. However, the food samples are only tested for 18 of those 44 carcinogens. Some of the food we consume, like processed foods, are not tested for pesticides at all. Benzene, formaldehyde and carbon tetrachloride (some of the most dangerous pesticide ingredients) are not included in setting acceptable levels of human exposure to pesticides. This means that even though they are known to be harmful, the levels at which these chemicals can be used are not regulated for the safety of human beings.

"Presumed Innocent: A Report on 69 Cancer-Causing Pesticides Allowed In Our Food," a report done in 1990 by CalPIRG found that 1) Sixty-nine different pesticides linked to cancer are legally allowed in our food; 2) Sixty of these pesticides are allowed in 16 commonly eaten foods like apples, corn and milk; 3) The routine monitoring methods used by the Food and Drug Administration could not detect 34 of the 69 carcinogens; and 4) Of the 188 pesticides found in food by the FDA in the 1988 food monitoring, 30 of the 69 carcinogens were present. The fact is, we buy food contaminated with cancer-causing pesticides that we could do well without, and the public is not directly informed of the dangers of the pesticides consumed.

However, food is not the only factor pesticides have affected. The groundwater of 28 counties in California has already been contaminated by 57 different pesticides; groundwater that 40 percent of Californians depend on as their source of drinking water. Pesticides also affect the air drastically. Only about 1 percent of the 2.6 billion pounds of pesticides used annually in the United States reaches its intended target. The wind carries the remaining 99 percent of the chemicals off into schools, residential areas and reservoirs, among other places.

As a result of this massive escape of chemicals (as well as by other means) the rivers, oceans and lakes suffer heavy pollution. On land, besides the harmful effects these pesticides have on humans, they also affect wildlife drastically. Reproductive failure among many bird species is caused by pesticides. It is evident that pesticides not only harm the human population, but the environment as well. Cycles are broken and the ecology of certain areas is destroyed.

Despite all of the harm pesticides have done up until now, action can still be taken. Alternative products to pesticide-grown food are available. Locally, stores like the Isla Vista Food Co-op, Hope 'N Hagen's, San Marcos Farms and Follow Your Heart offer organically grown products that are better for the consumer, and also keep the groundwater, the soil and the environment free from harmful chemicals. Of course, the best way to fight pesticides is by educating yourself and others about the dangers of pestiair –

On Wednesday, May 15, students and faculty will gather at noon in Storke Plaza to discuss and protest the imminent 40 percent increase in student fees. To date, UCSB has remained muted in its protest of this threat, suggesting to many that it is a campus of rich sluggards, willing to pay any price to continue to relax by the sea. It is imperative that UCSB join the chorus of voices being raised against this attack on its own well-being.

Is the price of attending the University of California a bargain? Maybe so. Will it be a bargain next year at nearly half again the cost? How many such increases before education is completely out of reach? Don't believe that this year is the last fiscal crisis that California will see. Only five or six more hikes of the same size and the UC will cost as much as the most expensive Ivy League university. Unfortunately, as much as we would like it if it were, the UC is not Ivy League.

UC students face a battle on two fronts: against a California State Legislature hungry for any way to slash the deficit, and against the UC Regents, who look to swing the ax at students themselves. The current fiscal crisis is genuine and cuts are inevitable. However, with every other recipient of state funds screaming for their program to be spared, students must convince the Legislature and the governor that the University can bear no more losses than it has already

On the other front, there are the regents. If one considers the University portion of the California budget alone, the UC would remain the tenth largest state in the United States. The regents govern this state through a sprawling bureaucracy and with a lack of fiscal oversight that would drive any government into ruin. Although we are told that 1991-92 represents a budgetary emergency, the $295 million shortfall in question is actually only a reduction to the regents' own optimistic proposal for 1991-92. The 40 percent fee increase and frozen faculty salaries arise largely because the regents would rather bleed these sectors than trim portions of the bloated bureaucracy of the University.

Lest total despair drive us to inaction, the last chapter on the state budget and student fees has not yet been written. The best line of defense can be found in legislation already enacted (SB1645), which prescribes steady and slow growth in fees, limited to a maximum of 10 percent in the worst of years. This directive was written so that students and parents should be able to predict and prepare for the cost of education. Although SB1645 was penned in anticipation of exactly such a year as this one, the Legislature and the UC Regents now choose to ignore the limitation in order to solve their short-term fiscal shortfall.

The time for action is now. The regents meet at Irvine at the end of this week. The rally on Wednesday may represent the last and best opportunity to send a message to the regents, the Legislature and the governor. There is a fiscal crisis afoot, but don't balance the state budget on the backs of cides and spreading the word about the availability of safe food alternatives. Also, you can help by working with local and statewide citizens' groups on campaigns for safe food and clean water and by encouraging others to take part in these activities to raise awareness in the community.

CalPIRG has done a great amount of research and compilation to support legislation against the use of pesticides. Currently, CalPIRG is lobbying to pass legislation that would allow pesticide issues to be dealt with by the Department of Health, instead of the Department of Agriculture, which currently controls pesticide regulation. Pesticide regulation should be dealt with more from a perspective for the well-being of the population, rather than with the business perspective that the Department of Agriculture deals with at present. Nationally, the Public Interest Research Group is working to lock legislation to give the government the power to regulate what goes on agricultural imports, and not accept imports that use harmful pesticides.

Stopping pesticides from harming the environment further is not impossible. Simply by starting in your own home, you can help to get rid of the pesticides that pollute our groundwater, our soil, our air and cause serious damage to people and animals. More immediately, you can come to the UCen from 10 a.m. to 2 p.m. this week to learn more about the dangers of pesticides and other environmental problems. For more information, contact CalPIRG at

Bunk, I Say!

Editor, Daily Nexus:

The 40 percent fee increase is felonious bunk! We're having to pay jacked-up fees as our quality of education declines, student services disappear and the administration lives high off the hog. Our fees have already increased 35 percent in the last four academic years. Professors and staff are being cut. The Program of Intensive English/English as a Second Language and the Tutorial Center are becoming the first casualties of the budget crisis. Yet, the UC administration spends $790,000 annually to maintain Chancellor's homes, and has grown 40 percent in the past four years, compared to the 9.5 percent growth in undergraduate and graduate student enrollment. What exactly are these swelling ranks of administrators administering anyway?! Not only are there too many administrators, but they're making salaries that would make most taxpayers puke. For example, UC President Gardner has an annual salary of $230,000 — making him higher paid than the President of the United States!! You know, a quarter of a million dollars sure could go a long way towards saving important student services. And the paper trail of waste just seems to go on and on. Clearly, some of the valuable education dollars of students and taxpayers are misdirected to benefit the few who dictate our losses in this budget crisis. If this concerns you, be sure to come to the Informational Rally on Wednesday at noon in Storke Plaza, followed by a march to Cheadle at 12:50. We must let the administration know that they shouldn't balance the budget on the students'

CHOICE

Editor, Daily Nexus:

The California Abortion Rights Action League at UCSB is very pleased to see that voters will once again get the chance to vote on the ballot initiatives which were invalidated by voter apathy during the last regular election. We want to take this opportunity first to encourage everyone to exercise their right to vote on May 21 and 22. We are constantly reminded that our rights are in constant jeopardy of being revoked by the very few. Take a few minutes to vote so that a very few peo-ple do not make harmful decisions that will affect a great majority of people.

Second, as is our motto during elections, we encourage everyone to "Use your voice. Vote for CHOICE." We want to take this opportunity to endorse the Child Care Initiative, which will appear on the May 21 and 22 ballot. As members of CARAL, we believe that this initiative is an extension of the CHOICE issue, which we

The May 6 Nexus feature article on abortion describes the different options available to women who are faced with an unwanted or unexpected pregnancy. One option, as was taken by the 20-year-old student described in the article, is to terminate the pregnancy, and CARAL supports the right of all women to make

The alternative is to continue with the pregnancy. We also support a woman's right to choose this option and believe that such a decision should not produce tragic results. Indeed, a decision to have a baby should be a real CHOICE for women, not one that deprives them of life, liberty and the pursuit of happiness.

By supporting the Childcare Initiative, you're allowing individuals to make these personal decisions without the risk of tragic repercussions, such as not being able to attend the university.

If you vote against this initiative, you're voting to slam the university's door in the faces of single or work ing parents. Essentially, you're telling them that they made the wrong CHOICE. A vote against this initiative is a value judgment stating that you have more of a right to attend this university as a non-parent than does a

That's not the message we want to send to single and working parents who are thinking about attending UCSB. Please show your support for CHOICE by voting YES on the Childcare Initiative.

Showers Halt Play For Goldberger and Johnstone

UCSB Pair Are Tied in 1st Set

By Brian Banks Staff Writer

UCSB's top doubles team expected a difficult match in the first round of the NCAAs Monday, but the weather proved to be the toughest opponent, post-poning Tracie Johnstone and Debbie Goldberger's third attempt at a doubles championship.

With shifty winds and light rains wrecking havoc with the match schedule in Stanford, Johnstone and Goldberger saw their 3 p.m. match against Boston College's Jennifer Lane and Pam Piorkowski pushed back to 7 p.m. Beginning play after the rains had settled, both squads consistently held serve and exchanged leads in the first set. With the score 6-6 in the first and Boston College leading 4-2 in the tiebreaker, the rains returned, and play was halted until this morning.

"The officials decided to just send the doubles team home," Tournament spokesman John Brooks said. "It's raining again ... it's been off and on all day."

The postponement gives Johnstone and Goldberger a chance to reflect on what went wrong after allowing several opportunities to slip away in the first set. The Boston College squad was able to break UCSB at 5-5, before Johnstone and Goldberger were able to get a break to send the set to a tie

"We had some chances to pull away and we just didn't do that," UCSB Head Coach Chris Russell said. "(The postponement) will give us a chance to

So much for happy endings.

"It's just another case of the big guys calling the shots and the little guys getting worked," Head Coach Don Lo-wry said. "As a conference, the Big West got screwed. When the Big West is the third-toughest conference in the nation, and yet has only two individuals (UCI's Bret Hansen-Dent and Mike Roberts) going to the NCAAs, you're seeing how screwed the cap is."

When the 1991 season began for the UCSB baseball team back on Jan. 26, the Gauchos had hopes of compiling their second straight 40-win season plus a return trip to the NCAA Regionals. Santa Barbara took the field against Loyola Marymount that Saturday afternoon at Campus Diamond and, with an 8-4 victory, it appeared to be well on its way to accomplishing its preseason goals. Now it's May 14. And just like they did three and a half months ago, the Gauchos will take the field this afternoon at Campus Diamond (2:30 p.m. KCSB 91.9 FM) to oppose the Lions of LMU. However, this time, instead of opening day, it's the home finale. UCSB (30-25-1 overall,

Santa Barbara is not going to duplicate last year's 40 victories, nor is a trip to the NCAA Regionals in the offering. However, with its performance at Fresno last weekend, it now can sit back and think, "What if?" What if the Gauchos had played like that all year? Well, if you look close enough they actually did. They finished the season batting second in the league behind Long Beach State, but wound up seventh in the conference in pitching, with only UNLV finishing with a higher ERA. The only consistent pitcher on the Santa Barbara staff this year was senior right-hander Tim De-Grasse (8-3), who hurled a complete game Sunday, allowing only one earned run to record the win.

Athletes Or Actors? You Make The Call

David Robinson and Michael Jordan could someday have more than basketball trophies on their respective mantles. If the current trend continues, these superstars, along with other highsalaried athletes who nevertheless command millions for commercial endorsements, might be competing for an Emmy. Or even an

And the winner is ... Michael Jordan for Journey to Mars Blackmon. Michael is away filming his next feature, Jamming With Wolves. Accepting for him is his Rainman 2 co-star, David Robinson.

A scary thought, indeed. But more and more athletes are venturing into De Niro territory via commercials. Michael and David have now-legendary shoe spots, and other sports stars, most often basketball players, are following suit. Magic Johnson, not exactly Mr. Death-Defying Jam, fire-breathes a ball through the backboard after tasting some fried chicken. Joe Montana claims that Diet Pepsi is the right one, uh huh. Even Tommy Lasorda, whose greatest moment as a player came when he single-handedly devoured the team buffet, pitches Slim Fast. A check at the Dodgers' record makes one think that all Tommy really needs is some Win Fast.

ut it's not just the superstars who are getting into the act. Recent Nike commercials have featured such NBA-ers as Sherman Douglas and Gary Payton. Fine young players, sure. But would you buy a shoe from an expansion-team guard whose free-throw percentage is lower than room temperature and who has more turnovers than a bakery? Or one from a rookie who doesn't even start for the #8 team in the Western Conference? Douglas and Payton may be superstars in the league someday, but for now, the only acting they should be doing is to draw a foul.

In this endless maze of commercials (watch between timeouts during a basketball game on TNT for the barrage of NBA pitchmen), few spots stand out. For some reason, the best ones always feature strange camera movement and lots of weird visuals. It's as if a guy labeled "too concep-tual" by the Dockers people got a job for Nike. Just take a look at a "Mr. Robinson's Neighborhood" commercial for an example of unnecessary zooms and annoying sound effects.

The main attraction to the good ones, though, is the performance from the star. Magic gets credit for making the viewer believe

Continued from p.8 that receive invitations for the postseason. Two years ago, the NCAA invited only 16 of the 391 total Division I squads. This shut many of the talented, yet lowerranked teams and individuals out of the NCAAs before the total was raised to 20

But, in a compromise of sorts to the economically minded NCAA, it was agreed that the total number of players would not be raised above 156. Thus, the 20 squads invited for team competition take many of the 156 slots, and after spaces are allotted to the highly ranked singles players not on the 20 teams in the tournament, few vacancies remain for the lowestpriority doubles invitations.

For Santa Barbara, this meant no space for Gauchos Curb and Flachman, despite the fact that the pair had been ranked #7 in the West Region, which not only comprises the Big West, but also the powerful Pacific 10. The tandem had gone 20-2 overall for the season, including a perfect 12-0 in league play, and had won the Big West tournament in #1 doubles. The two had recorded six direct wins over NCAA-bound opponents, but all of this wasn't enough. For Lowry, it was both unexpected and terribly disappointing.

"Nobody deserves it more," Lowry said, obvi-ously upset at the effects of the "dumb rule," according to the coach. "They had an incredible year, so it's just unfortunate that they had to suffer because of a bad rule that's not working."

Only a true thespian could convince us that all it takes to fly through the air and secure a spot on that night's highlight reel is a couple of all-beef patties. And to top it off, Jordan suggests a cold can of Coke ...

not even Diet! Athletes do sometimes look beyond their checkbooks when making commercials. The NBA filmed some effective spots for worthy causes, most notably the Stay-in-School organization. But even solid cue-card reading from the likes of Jordan and Thomas can't hide the hypocrisy of these athletes, stars who abandoned college early for the NBA, preaching the value of school. What's next, Jose Canseco for the DMV?

Finally, one last remembrance for the Man Who Would be King, Bo Jackson. Bo enjoyed a fine run, including perhaps the best commercial yet - that "Don't I know you?" one where he plays about 12 different sports. But an injury has taken its toll on his acting career, and now Bo would follow ... doesn't know when he will take center stage again. For now, fans will have to be content with "Bo knows those damn hospital robes that never cover your butt." It just doesn't seem the

In the meantime, there are plenty of athletes who will be glad to take Bo's place. Even UCSB's own Brian Shaw got himself into a Nike spot, even if the part was simply "Man admiring the gracefulness of Michael Jordan." Shaw did it perfectly, and who knows what can come next? Maybe his own television special. A variety show with singers, dancers and, of course, MC Brian telling some great I.V. jokes. And the awards that

"She moves around a lot, she's a great athlete," he said. "She's put some pressure on us at the net because that's where we like to play."

The match will resume this morning at 8 a.m. with the Boston College team serving in the tiebreaker. If Lane and Piorkowski hold on to win the first set, Johnstone and Goldberger would be forced to win two straight sets to advance. Because of the unexpected postpone-ment, the winner of the firstround match will have to play later this afternoon.

Continued from p.1 man class who will never make it through their first year of college - and according to officials, it's usually a personal decision rather than academic trouble that makes a student decide that UCSB is not for

"Often students find they have strong family bonds or boyfriend-girlfriend ties. ... There is a sense of feeling that one belongs more in a certain place," College of Letters and Science Academic Advisor Joyce Carasa said.

"A lot of students haven't come to terms with why they're here," Vice Chancel-lor of Student Affairs Michael Young said. "They often have family expecta-tions of why they should be here, even though it may not be the right kind of place for them."

And when this realization hits a student, there is only so much the university can do to stop it, said David Kohl, an associate dean for the College of Letters and Science, adding that financial problems, family pres-sures, emotional difficulties and academic troubles are all motivations for dropping

A 1990 UC-wide study on college dropouts from the freshman class of 1982 found that, by 1988, 30 percent of the class had left the university, mostly for personal reasons. In fact, 24 percent left for nonacademic reasons while only 6 percent left due to academic trouble.

And when it comes to students making a personal decision, UCSB academic advisors see it both as a student's right and a fundamental reality of college life. "I'm all for people leaving if the university doesn't work out for them," Academic Advisor Britt Johnson explained. "After a year, many students decide that they and Santa Barbara are not a perfect fit. No one knows as well as you do what's right for you."

According to UCSB Senior Administrative Analyst Dario Caloss, 12 percent of the freshman class of 1989 did not return this year. He estimated that three-fourths of those freshmen who left for academic difficulties had another reason for leaving. The retention rate for freshmen after the first year, he added, has hovered around 84 to 87 percent.

"We say congratulations for making a decision to the student who leaves because they choose to walk out," Kohl said, adding that the main goal of academic counselors is to ensure that those students who want to, graduate from UCSB. "If, at the end of their freshman year, a student produces a 1.0 grade point average and writes an appeal to stay en-rolled, we'll say, 'Show us a strong quarter at a community college and we are more than happy to take you back," he said.

According to Kohl, if a student shows initiative in his work, the university will do everything it can to ensure that he or she stays enrolled. "We don't have any limit for students. We never say, 'This is your last chance,' but we may tell them this is their last chance for now," he said.

BUT LOOK AT THE WAY THEIR MOUTHS STILL QUIVER WITH PAIN. SURELY THEY MUST HAVE BEEN CONSCIOUS OF THEMSELVES DURING THEIR FINAL MOMENTS

However, Kohl added, some students tend to blame the university for the personal problems which force them to leave. "We see that students often have a series of things happen to them. Sometimes they have problems with the registrar or the professors and they shift the blame to them," he

"We don't want any student to leave who we think shouldn't. We do all we can to help students stay here," Young said, adding that the ultimate responsibility lies with the student. "We help students recognize what the issues are so they can make a responsible decision."

UCen Mural Saved From Destruction by Letter From Artist

By Jan Hines Staff Writer

In 1974, UCSB student David McCutchen spent eight months painting a mural on a wall inside the University Center in an attempt to fuse music and images with a

Earlier this year, he ended up saving his own work by protesting UCen expansion plans which would have de-

The mural, McCutchen's undergraduate project, is based on the guitar piece entitled "Concierto de Aran-juez" by Joaquin Rodrigo. McCutchen spent eight months painstakingly transferring musical notes into

The mural was the beginning of a career which included bringing together visual imagery, sound and motion to create a unique type of art.

"I consider the Aranjuez mural as the foundation of my artistic career and reputation ... I am also convinced that it will come in time to be seen as prophetic of future art which will be audio-visual in nature," McCutchen wrote in a letter to UCen Director Alan Kirby.

"I understand that renovation of that portion of the UCen will be commencing soon. I would like a guarantee that UCSB and the UCen will not paint out this mural. ... I have already had the heartbreak of losing six murals in my life, including another one in the UCen, and I have never had a guarantee that this one, the most important to me of all, wouldn't be destroyed as well. I gave it freely to the UCSB community and all I ask is that it be appreciated for what it is," McCutchen wrote.

According to Kirby, the UCen Governance Board was unaware of the importance of the mural. "Once he explained the situation, there was no problem with leaving that area alone," he said. Kirby added that the hallway where the mural resides is slated to become a food court, which will give heighten the visibility of the piece.

UCen Governance Board member David Ward said that moving the mural was an option until they discovered that it would irreparably damage the piece. "Because we couldn't move it, it will remain where it is," Ward said, adding that the artist contacted the board with his concern in time to make some adjustments.

"The plan now is to leave it where it is. The architects know they have to work around it," Ward said.

When asked why the board had not considered preserving the mural before being contacted by the artist, Ward said that he had only noticed it a few times, and did not know of the musical connection. "He gave a big presentation explaining what it is, and we decided that it should stay," he said.

The mural is an image of the musical score in which each individual note is colored to match an instrument, and painted the way it would sound as played. For example, a sharp note is more distinctly visible than a soft note. The background attempts to set the mood of the

"I wanted to see if what sounded good would end up looking good as well," McCutchen said.

On Easter Sunday 1975, McCutchen recorded the mural on film together with the music that had inspired it. The film was entitled Over the Edge: The Marriage of Painting and Music. Reflections on a Theme, a second film using the mural was made in 1976. McCutchen spent five weeks on his knees attempting to create an animated production by shooting the film one frame at a time. Both Reflections and Over the Edge have been

"It is the last remnant of an era when community spirit was so strong that there was an intense competition to paint murals for the enjoyment of the public. The liberating effects of such large-scale, open-air works ... was very important to many artists and the community was proud of the colorful results," McCutchen said.

Several alumni have stepped forward to show their support for the mural. Bruce Saliagian, who graduated in 1976, wrote to Kirby about the first time he entered the UCen in 1974 and saw McCutchen at work.

"What a wonderful feeling to be suddenly confronted with the passion of art in the midst of too many stony cubicles ... Please consider its creation and importance before recklessly shattering a beautiful gift of art," he wrote.

McCutchen is still actively involved with the UCen mural, and plans to install a coin-operated cassette player to allow visitors to listen to the music as they look at the mural.

SPILL: Drilling Danger

Continued from p.1 day, oil began pouring from Unocal Corp. pipeline near its Platform Gina into 95 feet of water, according to Coast Guard officials. The spill was six miles west of Oxnard and south of Anacapa Island. Though not an exceptionally large one, the spill is still the biggest Ventura County has seen in several years, officials said.

Unocal was also responsible for a spill in 1969 that spewed 50,000 to 70,000 gallons of oil onto the local shores. The resulting massive destruction is credited with triggering much of the environmental movement, including the establishment of the Environmental Protection Agency and the Earth Day celebration.

Although favorable weather conditions contributed to the successful cleanup of Friday's spill, the effects could have been disastrous had the oil reached the delicate Channel Islands National Marine Sanctuary and the Santa Barbara Ecological Reserve.

"At 12 p.m. Sunday, Unrecoverable oil remains. The only thing left is patches of sheen seven to eight miles off the shore and traveling south to southeast. We do not expect it to hit any beaches, and it should dissipate naturally," said a representative from the Long Beach Coast Guard, which dealt with the cleanup

Representatives from Unocal were unavailable for comment, but earlier reports indicated that the spill occurred when a boat working for the company ruptured an underwater pipeline with a grappling hook while attempting to pull up its anchor.

In an additional development, the Mariposa Pipeline Company announced Thursday that it is request-ing California Coastal Commission approval to transport oil 25 miles west of Santa Barbara through an inland pipeline. Onlookers admire Native American crafts on display as part of American Indian Culture week.

Native Americans Celebrate Original Culture This Week

By Dorothy Merifield Staff Writer

A display of traditional Native American crafts, including dazzling jewelry and blankets spangled with brilliant, multicolored designs kicked off American Indian Culture Week on Monday.

"We want to promote awareness that we are on this campus and have similar goals as other students," American Indian Student Association President Michelle Villegas said.

The blankets and traditional beadwork by Native American student Leslie Sunshine Koda were displayed in front of the Women's Center.

The blankets were raffled off to raise funds for two UCSB students travelling to an Apache puberty ceremony on an Apache Indian reservation. Indian tacos and freshly baked frybread were also sold.

The American Indian Store on State Street in Santa Barbara sponsored a sale of engraved silver jewelry made by various American Indian tribes. All proceeds from the sale will go to the Santa Barbara Urban Indian Health Project, which provides medical services and counseling for Native Americans in the community.

Money raised through this week's events will help fund an American Indian Awareness Month in November that will focus on creating an American Indian Studies Department at UCSB.

The AISA, with the help of the Student Commission on Racial Equality, will host a number of events this week, including showings of the movie Dances With Wolves this Wednesday and Thursday, and a performance by Native American flute player Carlos Nakai on Friday night.

American Indian Week's sponsors hope to provide the campus community with a concentrated view of American Indian culture and students' pride in it, as well as raise awareness of the growing national concern of increasing Native American student enrollment in universities.

Despite the setback of Tiananmen Square, Fang sees China as following the lead of Eastern Europe and moving toward democracy. "China will not be able to avoid the global trend toward democracy," he said.

The international support of the pro-democracy movement added external pressure on China's government on top of the internal steam rising in the Chinese people, and will continue, Fang predicted.

"The commitment that the students in Tiananmen Square made with their lives is the commitment we must make today," he said.

The crowd reaction was overwhelmingly favorable, "The government fears that if people become too educated, they will become political agitators."

"I was interested in the history he gave us but I was expecting more about China's human rights violations," senior economics major Frank Yen added.
