Residents of Isla Vista Show Liberal Viewpoint With Election Choices

By Elizabeth Giffin
County Editor

Democrat Tom Bradley would be governor, Rose Bird would still be Chief Justice of the Supreme Court, English would not be the state's official language and democratic candidate Wayne Norris would represent the 19th Congressional District if Isla Vistans had their way in Tuesday's general election.

"I would have liked it if Isla Vista had been the only precinct counted because I was kind of displeased with (the outcome of the election)," said UCSB senior Paco Sovich, an anthropology/hispanic civilization major.

College Republican member Fred Marquardt was not surprised by the I.V. vote. "I think that democratic alliance somehow represents more of an idealistic viewpoint that is shared by college-age students," he said.

Despite the increased number of registered republican voters, democratic I.V. residents saw victory in one important race — the United States Senate. Democratic incumbent Alan Cranston narrowly defeated Republican opponent Ed Zschau statewide by only one percentage point. Though county voters favored Zschau 51.4 to 45.9 percent, he was decisively beaten by Cranston in I.V. by a 69 to 29 percent margin.

Out of 14,250 I.V. and campus residents eligible to vote, 31 percent participated in the election.

Countywide voter turnout was also low this year, with only 57 percent of eligible voters participating in the election. An estimated turnout of 71 percent was expected, which is consistent with gubernatorial elections, Santa Barbara County Registrar of Voters Carol Acquistapace said.

I.V. Foot Patrol May Lose Half of its Funding

By Lisa Frankenberg

The Isla Vista Foot Patrol could lose half its funding if the Student Fee Advisory Committee decides that usage of student monies is inappropriate for financing non-educational student services.

Currently, the committee gives the Foot Patrol approximately $240,000 a year in funding, taking $12.75 from each student's quarterly registration fee of $440.00.

According to Student Fee Advisory Committee Chair Debbie Donaldson, "the committee is currently gathering facts and looking into alternative methods of funding" for the patrol in the event that student fees should be withdrawn.

In addition, the committee plans to work together with local law enforcement officials, such as UCSB Acting Chief of Police John MacPherson, to determine the fiscal and long-term effects a cut in student funds would entail before reaching a decision.

The Foot Patrol, in existence since 1971, is financed jointly by university registration fees and county funds. The patrol consists of twelve officers: five UCSB police officers, five Sheriff's Department deputies, and one sergeant from each department.

Since registration fees are meant to be used exclusively for the support of student services, questions have arisen over whether financing the Foot Patrol is a valid usage of student money. Some who oppose continued student funding claim that since the Foot Patrol serves I.V. in the same way a city police force serves the city it patrols, the cost should be borne by residents of the community.

"I think that if there wasn't a Foot Patrol, confrontations with the police would be very harsh," Associated Students Off-Campus Representative Marc Evans said. "But I don't think that students should be responsible for paying for a community service. It should be the taxpayer's responsibility."

"My concern is that if (the Foot Patrol) must be funded, if not by the students, elsewhere," Vice Chancellor of Student and Community Affairs Ed Birch said. "The Foot Patrol provides basic security. It is absolutely essential that the Foot Patrol exists for the health, safety and welfare of the over 50 percent student population in Isla Vista," he added.

Of the nine UC campuses, only Berkeley and Santa Barbara use student funds to provide police protection, according to Donaldson.

At its meeting Tuesday, the Student Fee Advisory Committee discussed other possible methods of financing police protection, including the use of state taxpayer funds, UC Regents funds, opportunity funds accrued from the interest on research stipends or a combination of all three.

In the recent past, opportunity funds were used to supplement the costs of running the Foot Patrol. Under the administration of former Chancellor Robert Huttenback, however, the costs were absorbed by student registration fees, Birch said.

"Previously, (the committee) decided not to fund the I.V. Foot Patrol. However, the chancellor (Huttenback) has always blocked the decision," Donaldson said.

Overenrollment Affects Health Center; Less Hours, New Fees

By Mark Andrew Terlesky
Assistant Campus Editor

Starting this Saturday, the Student Health Service will close its doors on weekends and charge higher prices for prescriptions to compensate for spiraling costs caused by overenrollment.

The center also plans to begin charging for specialists' visits, pregnancy tests and birth control exams.

"The weekend closure is related to increasing costs," SHS Director John Baumann said. "We simply don't have the resources to continue everything we've done before, mostly because of overenrollment."

"Last year it (SHS) was in debt because too many people were using the service," said Debbie Donaldson, chair of the Student Fee Advisory Committee. "We covered that debt. This year it asked us for more money. We then asked SHS its options for not needing any additional money, and one of those was not being open on weekends," she said.

"If money becomes available, we'll be more than willing to give them more. We give recommendations for what students want (with their fees), and we want as many services for students as we can give them," Donaldson added.

According to Baumann, overenrollment's effect on SHS is made worse by a 4-year-old freeze in reg fees by the UC Board of Regents which prevents an increase in the center's budget to defray increasing operating costs. Only the regents can raise reg fees, he said.

The move to somehow cut expenses at SHS has been going on since school started, Baumann explained. The Student Fee Advisory Committee came to its final decision concerning changes in health center operation on Oct. 31.

The decision-making process took place in four steps, Baumann explained. It began two months ago when SHS staff members were asked to submit (See HEALTH, p.3)

Iran Willing to Use Influence in Beirut to Release Hostages

NICOSIA, Cyprus — Two Iranian officials said Wednesday that Tehran is willing to work for the release of French and American hostages in Lebanon in return for the release of Iranian assets seized in the United States after the 1979 revolution; recognition of the rights of Lebanese Moslems; freedom for political prisoners in Israel and elsewhere; and shipment of weapons purchased by the government of ousted Shah Pahlavi but never delivered.

A third official, Prime Minister Hussein Husavi, said in a report broadcast by Tehran radio that there was no possibility of negotiating with the United States.

But although Musavi seemed to rule out direct talks, his comments did not appear to contradict declarations by other Iranian officials that a deal could be made. The difference in emphasis was seen as part of a growing internal struggle within the Iranian leadership.

Parliament speaker Hashemi Rafsanjani ridiculed what he said was a mission to Tehran by former National Security Advisor Robert McFarlane and four other Americans to try to mend U.S.-Iranian relations. U.S. officials have not confirmed the mission.

According to Rafsanjani, McFarlane identified himself to immigration officials and said he had a mission from President Reagan. The five were detained at a hotel for five days and expelled without delivering the message or meeting any officials, Rafsanjani said.

But Rafsanjani signaled that rejection of the purported mission does not mean Iran won't help.

"If you want us to help you, provided like other you do not interfere with our job, we will help — if our friends in Lebanon accept," he was quoted as saying in Iran's Islamic Republic News Agency, monitored in Nicosia.

U.S., Soviets Swap Charges of Human Rights Violations

VIENNA, Austria — The United States and the Soviet Union traded charges of human rights violations Wednesday and then held extended talks on how to carry out their Iceland summit pledges for sharp reductions in nuclear weapons.

Secretary of State George P. Shultz, speaking at a 35-nation conference aimed at improving relations between East and West, said "a tragic human rights situation" existed in the Soviet Union and among its Eastern allies. He warned that arms control would falter unless the perceived abuses were corrected.

Soviet Foreign Minister Eduard A. Shevardnadze invited the 35 nations at the conference to send representatives to Moscow, to meet on problems of "human contact, information, culture and education." He lashed out at the United States, where "violations of human rights are of a systematic and massive nature."

Shevardnadze pointed to unemployment, the plight of the homeless and what he said was a lack of free social benefits and education.

American Has No Big Medical Problems from Hostage Ordeal

WIESBADEN, West Germany — Freed American hostage David Jacobsen suffered no major medical problems from his 17 months in captivity in Lebanon but should undergo follow-up tests in the United States, U.S. Air Force doctors said Wednesday.

Jacobsen, 55, spent his third day undergoing tests at the Air Force hospital in Wiesbaden, and officials declined to say when he would leave.

"No major problems have been found which could be related to his 17 months of captivity," Air Force doctors said in a statement after completing their examinations. "Recommendations have been made to Mr. Jacobsen for some routine follow-up tests after his return to the U.S."

Jacobsen, of Huntington Beach, Calif., was kidnapped in Beirut, Lebanon, on May 28, 1985, while on his way to work as director of the American University Hospital there.

Democrats Control Senate; Reagan Must Now Be Very Careful

WASHINGTON — A Democratic surge ended Republican rule of the Senate's levers of power, forcing President Reagan to choose between compromise or stalemate in the last two years of his White House term.

Democrats, picking off GOP seats around the nation on Tuesday, served notice on President Reagan that his last two years in office will require "the art of government by compromise."

In California, three-term Democrat Alan Cranston defeated Rep. Ed Zschau and is expected to become the majority whip in the Senate.

In a dramatic show of strength in Tuesday's elections, Democrats captured Republican seats in eight states: Florida, Georgia, North Carolina, North Dakota, South Dakota, Alabama, Maryland, Washington and Nevada. They turned back strong challenges to Democratic seats in Colorado, Louisiana and California and yielded a Democratic seat only in Missouri.

The Democrats now control the Senate by a 56-44 majority.

The Democratic triumph ended the Republicans' 53-47 grip on the Senate. It came at the end of the costliest campaign in history — and one that had no national theme but was characterized by negative campaign advertising — "mudslinging" in popular parlance.

Senate Democratic Leader Robert C. Byrd of West Virginia — now in line to become majority leader — predicted that a Democratic-controlled Senate will "pull the administration back toward the center in its extremes in foreign policy and its extremes in domestic policy."

"The Democrats are all set to go to work," he said. "We don't want confrontation."

"I would hope we would not see a fortress White House that feels it is under siege. We Democrats feel that for the good of the country we want to all cooperate. I would hope that the president would not be confrontational."

Senate Republican Leader Bob Dole of Kansas now will become floor leader of a minority, freed to pursue presidential ambitions without having to defend Reagan's agenda on the Senate floor. Dole said the Democratic victory would "make it more difficult for Ronald Reagan."

He also said the White House will be forced to be very careful in selecting judicial nominees.

The Democrats, while taking over control of the Senate for the first time since the Reagan landslide in 1980, marginally strengthened their numbers in the House.

That meant Reagan would have a more difficult time selling the most controversial of his programs, from his Strategic Defense Initiative to his American-financed war against the Nicaraguan government. Democrats were likely to press for new taxes to combat the deficit and for legislation to stem the tide of imports from abroad.

Reagan had campaigned for continued Republican control of the Senate with the fervor of a personal crusade, saying a Democratic victory Tuesday would confine him to a six-year presidency.

Massachusetts Cave-in Closes New England's Major Oil Route

BOSTON — The narrow, three-mile-long riverway through which most of New England's petroleum products are shipped has been closed because of a cave-in, and storage tanks were emptied to prevent any spills, authorities said.

About 150 to 175 feet of pier and retaining wall adjacent to the Chelsea Street Bridge collapsed Monday evening into Chelsea Creek, said Richard L. Anderson, the Coast Guard's captain of the port.

Anderson ordered the channel closed to marine traffic, shutting off all movement of home heating oil, jet fuel, chemicals, gasoline, lubricating oil and industrial oil to tank farms that are among the largest in New England.

The collapse occurred at the 37-year-old former Jenney Fuel Dock, a tank farm that is operated by Northeast Petroleum Co., officials said.

Inmate Escapes from Pleasanton Jail in a Rented Helicopter

PLEASANTON — A woman inmate at the Federal Correctional Institute made an escape from a compound Wednesday in a rented helicopter commandeered by a man posing as a businessman, police reported.

The break occurred between 11:15 a.m. and 11:30 a.m. at the institute, located in a Pleasanton area called Camp Parks, about 50 miles east of San Francisco, according to Danville Police Sgt. Rick Morgan.

Morgan told reporters a man who said he was a land developer chartered a Hughes helicopter Wednesday morning at San Jose, about 50 miles southeast of Pleasanton. The man directed the pilot to fly to the rugged Las Trampas Regional Park area, a wilderness area.

Morgan said the man then produced a handgun, ordered the pilot out of the machine, climbed into the control seat and flew the helicopter to the federal prison compound. The pilot later hiked out of the wilderness.

Radio scanner messages monitored by reporters told of the helicopter landing inside a fenced compound and taking off with a female inmate. Area police also confirmed the escape.

Officials at the prison said the warden was the only one who could comment on the escape and he could not be immediately reached.

Lyndon LaRouche Warns About AIDS Despite Prop. 64's Defeat

SAN FRANCISCO — Political extremist Lyndon LaRouche, commenting on the resounding defeat of his controversial AIDS initiative, said Wednesday "a lot of people are going to die unnecessarily as a result ..."

The California initiative, Proposition 64, would have added AIDS to a state roster of highly contagious diseases. The measure lost by a margin of more than two to one, with 70 percent voting against it and 30 percent in favor.

If it had passed, anyone infected with the AIDS virus would have been barred from working as a food handler or from working or attending any school or college in the state.

LaRouche made his comments by telephone to KGO-radio in San Francisco from his Leesburg, Va., home. He said Tuesday's election results do not mark the end of his campaign against AIDS.

"As Lincoln said, 'you can't fool all of the people all of the time.' The next go-around on this, and whatever form it takes on AIDS, we're going to find that a lot of people fooled yesterday will not be fooled on the next go-around," LaRouche said.

But he said he would not use the AIDS issue to further his own political career.

"I don't play those kind of cheap-shot political games," he said.

He also said he was not concerned about the fact that all of his candidates lost their respective races across the country.

"What I represent is a growing movement," he said. "The movement is becoming stronger all the time, and I'm watching the growth in the strength of the movement as opposed to the absolute result."

FOOT PATROL

Aldrich told advisory committee members that he would "stand by the students" in whatever decision they reach regarding Foot Patrol funding.

"It's strictly the university's problem. We have no say in the matter," said Captain Norm Horsely of the Santa Barbara County Sheriff's Department. "The worst case scenario would happen if, say, the chancellor or whoever makes that decision, said not to give the funding, and we'd be left with only half of what the Foot Patrol has now, but still have the same number of Sheriff's deputies," he explained.

Supporters of the Foot Patrol claim the force is needed since I.V. is such a highly populated district.

"If you analyze recent crime statistics (in I.V.) you'll find there's been more arrests for violent crimes involving victims than for crimes without victims (such as theft)," said UCSB Ombudsman Geoffrey Wallace.

"It's crucial that all the facets of a decision are explored before that decision is made. You have to be careful not to throw the baby out with the bath water," Wallace added.

"The Foot Patrol has become a service fixture in the community, not only providing protection for students, but also serving as a contact between I.V.'s homeless population," Assistant Chancellor of Student and Community Affairs Ernest Zomalt said. "I don't think it would be expedient to lose that link."

Student opinion on the Foot Patrol varies. "They act like they're all-powerful. A lot of times they'll come to conclusions about somebody without really finding out what's going on. It's kind of like a military gestapo in that respect," said senior Brad Honsberger.

"Basically they're playing the role of a security guard instead of a police officer," senior Bruce Sweet said. "They just bully and harass. The tactics they use are ridiculous."

Another senior, who asked to remain anonymous, believes the Foot Patrol is no longer needed in I.V. "They were set up in 1971 when they were really needed, but now they've become pseudo-cops, basically insensitive to student needs and therefore unnecessary," the student said. "I've heard of numerous incidents where their actions seem so incongruent in conjunction with being a public server."

However, freshman Frank Guerra supported the service. "I think that we should have a Foot Patrol and it should come out of our reg fees because it's a student service and as students we will benefit from them," he said.

suggestions on how the service could save money or generate more. Proposals were then discussed by the Student Health Advisory Committee, the Student Fee Advisory Committee and were finally approved by Vice Chancellor of Student and Community Affairs Ed Birch.

Donaldson claimed that if there is dissatisfaction among students because of the closure, it is because the Student Fee Advisory Committee is often unable to get student input before making its decisions. "It's hard for us to make recommendations when we're not quite sure what the students want," she said.

In order to get feedback related to the weekend closure, Donaldson plans to conduct a student survey at SHS, she said.

Students can also expect an increase in the cost of prescriptions, Baumann said. The pharmacy will now charge $3 to fill a prescription, $1 more than in the past. This will affect all prescriptions, including birth control pills, which have previously been discounted at the center.

This worries birth control educators, who feel that the higher prices will make people indifferent toward seeking contraception, which could lead to more unwanted pregnancies.

"If you wanted the pill before ... it would be $8 for 12 months (13 cycles)," said UCSB senior Heidi Peyrefitte, a birth control educator at SHS. "Now it will be about $8 for one month ($39 for 13 cycles). That's a lot of money for students, and I'm afraid they're not going to come to the Student Health Center anymore and use the education service, not to mention the pharmacy. That's scary," she said.

Since SHS has always had a small number of patients on weekends, Baumann believes the effects of the Saturday and Sunday closure will be negligible. "The number of patients we have coming in on weekends is very, very low, sometimes only two to three patients," he said.

"Now, for Rugby Weekend it might be something like 30 to 40, but the average is 15 ... and that's of course extremely variable. This compares to the 300 to 400 we see during the week."

In the past, SHS has been open for four hours a day on both Saturday and Sunday.

Baumann emphasized that alternative weekend medical care will be available in case of emergencies. "Medical and emergency care will be provided by the campus paramedics. They will evaluate it (an illness or injury), do a treatment at no charge and give transportation at no charge — which is no different from what's been done before — to a local emergency room if needed," he said.

"Overall, they (the paramedics) will have some increase in their services, but they're not that busy. I don't think it will be a case where the students will overwhelm them," he said.

Guy Bull, Rescue Operations supervisor at UCSB's Department of Public Safety, agreed. "Right now it's hard to predict what kind of volume we'll have. But what people will probably call us for are things that they're afraid to wait to deal with."

For example, someone with a skin rash will probably wait until a weekday to get it checked, whereas someone with a stubbed, possibly broken toe will want a quick evaluation, he explained.

According to Bull, the only predictable problem with the SHS weekend closure is that injuries or illnesses once treated free of charge will no longer be free to students who have weekend mishaps.

"The more minor types (of injuries) will have to be taken to the hospital at greater expense ... so there's an increased cost to students that would not be there if it (SHS) was open," Bull said.

If the paramedics average two to three calls a weekend, the increased load caused by the weekend closure should not place an excessive burden on the paramedics, Bull claimed. "But if we have 15 calls on a Saturday morning, that would be a big surprise for us," he said.

Paying for Our Feet Through the Nose

Editorial

Most UCSB students don't realize that nearly $13 of their yearly registration fees go to fund the Isla Vista Foot Patrol.

As a result of the I.V. riots in 1971, students, administrators and county officials agreed to establish the Foot Patrol as local method of law enforcement. It was agreed at that time that both the county and the students would split the costs of the patrol.

Fifteen years later, the Student Fee Advisory Committee is questioning the validity of using those fees for this purpose. In addition, they may recommend that the funding be withdrawn.

Should student education fees be used to fund the Foot Patrol when the money is badly needed elsewhere, for example, to provide additional instructors for impacted courses like English and economics?

Currently every student registered at UCSB pays a yearly fee of $12.75 to help fund the six campus and six county officers who make up the Foot Patrol. Yet to still require UCSB students to pay these additional fees for their protection is an outdated and ridiculous idea — especially while we reside in an area that is supposedly under the jurisdiction of the county.

The result is a double tax on the student residents of Isla Vista. They are not only paying taxes to the county through their rents, but also the additional costs of the Foot Patrol. Local landlords, homeowners and residents pay county and state property taxes, yet this revenue is mystically diverted when the services it funds, such as adequate police protection, are needed in our vicinity.

Accordingly, the UCSB Student Fee Advisory Committee recognized long ago that the Foot Patrol was not a valid use of student funds. However, their requests to terminate this policy have been effectively stymied by the administration.

The question here is not whether to dissolve the Foot Patrol. We recognize their importance in Isla Vista and having such a unique form of law enforcement can work to our advantage. Though we are not burning banks, I.V. is far from a tranquil town. Halloween and Rugby weekends remind us that laws are broken in this extremely compacted area.

However, while students help keep the Foot Patrol alive, they have very little input or communicative dialogue with officers. There exists a good deal of antagonism between both groups. And though the Foot Patrol's presence may be needed to control unruly citizens and stem crime, they also need to work with us to improve their notorious image.

To divest student money from their budget would not crush the Foot Patrol. It could instead serve to spur the county into action to approve more funds for Isla Vista. And it is up to students to make sure that they get the message.

Chancellor Aldrich said recently that he would back a decision by the students on this issue. The Student Fee Advisory Committee should take advantage of this opportunity to finally achieve their goal.

This is a love story.

I met her at a party, a small get-together among friends. The air was filled with heavy breathing and bad music, and I picked her out of a crowd who seemed to be debating over their favorite character in "The Cosby Show." I stared at her in a neanderthalish sort of way and she responded, twisting her slim hips in my direction, indicating to the crowd that she was changing her interests. "Hello," I said. "Hi," she said back. Contact.

I didn't give her my name because that was always tacky and indicated that I was coming on to her. Okay, so maybe I was, but that didn't mean she had to know it.

"What's your sign?" I asked.

"Yield," she answered, pursing her lips. Hot dog, I thought. I knew next that I must enter into a con-

It would be a tragedy to come so close to achieving major arms reductions as occurred in Reykjavik, and not push through to a successful outcome. Fortunately, there is a reasonable and straightforward solution to resolving the impasse which developed in Iceland.

The sticking point of the negotiations was the Strategic Defense Initiative, also known as SDI or "Star Wars." President Reagan wants to continue with its research, development and testing. General Secretary Gorbachev wants to restrict it to laboratory research only.

Following the summit meeting the General Secretary reported to the Soviet people: "After Reykjavik it is clearer than ever for everyone that SDI is the symbol of obstruction to the cause of peace, the epitome of military schemes, of the unwillingness to remove the nuclear menace looming over mankind. There can be no other interpretation."

In his speech to the nation, President Reagan reported, "The General Secretary wanted wording that, in effect, would have kept us from developing the SDI for the entire 10 years. In effect, he was killing SDI and unless I agreed, all that work toward eliminating nuclear weapons would go down the drain — cancelled.

"I told him I had pledged to the American people that I would not trade away SDI — there was no way I could tell our people their government would not protect them against nuclear destruction. I went to

We arrived yesterday afternoon at the end of a daylong truck ride from Achuapa. We accompanied Maurice's family who have come from Switzerland to visit.

"We visited Miraflores a few days after the attack. All of the families had had to flee to Esteli, and expect to move back in October, five months later. The destruction we saw there was tremendous. Burned homes, an entire potato crop lost in the mud, toys and clothing torn and scattered. In one little house, an entire wall was covered with the blood and flesh of three children blown up by a contra grenade tossed into the house. As we walked, a farmer who survived the attack told us of the plans to rebuild, a process which we could see was already beginning. The farm families of Miraflores have been attacked by the contra four times since June, 1984. Each time they rebuild. 'There we can plant our food and raise our children,' one mother told us. versation that shows her that I care for more than just her body.

"That's a nice dress you're wearing. I like the color." It was bullshit, of course. The color was all right, but I liked the way it made her body one smooth motion, and if I ever touched her, it would seem like forever. "Thank you," she said, "but the color really isn't that great. It doesn't go with my earrings, you see?" And by demonstrating she swished her luxuriously long black locks, making her earrings flash in the dim light.

"Oh, I don't know. I think it goes quite well."

"Oh, no it doesn't," she said coyly.

"Yes it does!" I insisted.

"Do you really think so?" she said, her bright brown eyes pleading to me.

"Definitely," I said. She beamed. This relationship was off to a good start.

The next hour we discovered that we had a bond that went beyond mere looks, although we both looked stunning, especially together. We enjoyed the same flavor of ice cream (pistachio). We agreed that Denise on "Cosby Show" had an utterly horrible hairstyle and that she looked much better last season. We both could sing all the words to Janet Jackson's classic song, "Nasty Boy." And, we both agreed that Phil Donahue had to be wearing a toupee.

God had given me my match.

But then, I learned something about her that — that just turned off the stars in my eyes. It was my mistake, actually. I said something that no decent person would say. But I didn't expect her to react like she did.

"Yeah, I think that Reagan's great." I caught myself instantly, but it was too late. I saw her face.

"Reagan? Are you kidding?" she said. I was afraid to look to see if anybody had heard us. And she started to talk. And people started to look at us, their faces sculpted in frightened surprise.

"...and furthermore," she was saying, "his policies over the issue of Nicaragua and funding of the contras is an utterly inhuman act that is merely a repeat of events that only twenty years ago caused... caused...." She saw my terrified, humiliated face and looked at the room that had grown silent at her words. She covered her reddening face with her hands and ran out of the room crying.

I didn't know what to do. I felt sick. But I knew strategic defenses.

This solution would satisfy Reagan's desire to proceed with the research and development of SDI and, at the same time, allow the Soviets to be involved in all stages of SDI development. This would satisfy the Soviet concern that in the process of doing SDI research and development, the U.S. would gain strategic advantage by: a) significantly improving their defensive capabilities, or b) making a major offensive breakthrough as a by-product of the SDI research.

The president has already proposed that he would permit Soviet observation of final testing of SDI. The Soviets, however, could reasonably doubt the value of such a pledge. In the first place, when final testing takes place Reagan will no longer be president, and he cannot guarantee that a successor would honor this commitment. More importantly, by the time the final stage of testing is reached, the U.S. will presumably have achieved the breakthrough which the Soviets fear will threaten their security.

Thus, the way to alleviate Soviet fears is to involve them in the project. If President Reagan is willing to give the results and benefits of our research after it is completed, he should be open to sharing with them the findings as we proceed. Of course, given the level of mistrust between the two countries we could not expect the Soviets simply to take our word that we are sharing fully with them. Rather, they must be allowed to see for themselves by participating in the project.

President Reagan has asked: "How does a defense of the United States threaten the Soviet Union or anyone else? Why are the Soviets so adamant that America remain forever vulnerable to a Soviet rocket attack? As of today, all free nations are utterly defenseless against Soviet missiles — fired either by accident or design. Why does the Soviet Union insist that we remain so — forever?"

that her kind of person was dangerous, and one that was going to cause me only trouble if I stuck around. I mean, I couldn't be seen around anybody who acted like they had anything important to say. People would talk. I thanked my host and left. I had maybe gone five, six feet away from the house when I felt a hand on my shoulder.

"Hello," I responded.

"Can...can we talk?"

"I don't think we have anything to talk about."

"But...but I thought we had something...special in there."

"That was before I realized what kind of girl you were," I said brusquely.

"I slipped. Can't you understand? Can't you forgive?"

I could smell her perfume, not too sweet, not too heavy. It smelled of skin and warmth. I turned around and looked at her tear-stricken face. I grabbed her gently and kissed her. "Yeah," I said, "I forget easily."

And we walked around for another hour. And we talked. Talked about things that meant something, like Bloom County, and "Dynasty", and Depeche Mode and the best recording tapes.

And neither of us said anything wrong again.

Garrett H. Omata is a freshman majoring in English.

The president is quite correct in insisting that we are vulnerable to Soviet attack — by accident or design. The opposite is equally true. The Soviets are vulnerable to a U.S. attack — by accident or design. This being the case, the president's question could be rephrased, "How does a defense of the Soviet Union threaten the U.S. or anyone else?" If it is true that defense threatens neither side, then there are important advantages to both sides working together to achieve a strategic defense — if such defense is, in fact, achievable.

The most important immediate advantage is that it would allow the potential agreements achieved in Iceland to be concluded, leading to major reductions and eventual elimination of strategic nuclear armaments.

A second advantage is that it would provide for a sharing of scientific and technological talent on a major joint project, thus improving the chances for success.

A third advantage is that it would provide for a sharing of expenses in what promises to be an expensive project. Since the project would be coupled with important steps toward mutual disarmament, the two countries could proceed at a pace to be mutually agreed upon that took into account other economic needs.

A final advantage is that it would set a precedent for joint U.S.-Soviet cooperation on projects of importance to both countries and the world. It would set a tone of constructive superpower leadership on global security issues rather than the continued pursuit of a competitive and dangerous nuclear arms race.

Reykjavik determined that everything was negotiable except two things, our freedom and our future."

Both sides clearly expressed strong emotional commitment to their positions on this issue. At this point it is less valuable to argue the logic of their positions than to recognize that both sides appear committed to the positions they have taken. Reagan sees SDI as necessary to protect America's "freedom and future," and Gorbachev sees it as a "symbol of obstruction to the cause of peace."

What is important now is not to argue the pluses and minuses of SDI, but to find a way to move beyond this impasse. Both leaders have indicated that they are willing to keep the door open to further negotiations. Reagan stated, "I am optimistic that a way will be found. The door is open and the opportunity to begin eliminating the nuclear threat is within reach."

Gorbachev told Argentine President Raul Alfonsin that the summit "showed that it is possible to approach agreement that would lay the beginning to the elimination of nuclear weapons. Our platform of new proposals, which are inseparable from each other — and we do not remove any of them — provides the opportunity to invigorate the search for mutually acceptable decisions." He went on to state that "the situation after the meeting did not deteriorate. It opens up new possibilities."

Since Reagan will not give up SDI and Gorbachev will not conclude arms reduction agreements that allow the U.S. to continue unilaterally to develop SDI, the solution can be found in a joint venture project in which the United States and the Soviet Union join together to research and, if feasible and desirable, develop mutual

Two weeks ago I was given a letter from Jim and Lucy Phillips-Edwards who have recently returned from Nicaragua. I wanted to share the above excerpts from their letter because, though shocking, these experiences are real. They are happening...right now. It is always difficult for me to believe that this sort of horror could be terrorizing the lives of others when I sit so comfortably in my Isla Vista apartment, discussing politics with friends. It is for people like you and me, and Maurice, that Jim and Lucy are sharing their experiences all over the country. They will be speaking this Thursday, Nov. 6 at 7:30 p.m. at St. Mark's Church in Isla Vista. I encourage all of you to come and see their slides and talk with them about what really is happening in that little country which we read about every day in the news.

Date Rape

Editor, Daily Nexus:

Lisa Frankenberg's account of the woman who was raped on Halloween raises an important question. What does happen to a woman after she has been raped? I have no idea how most women carry on; I can only offer my own experience. I was in a date rape situation. I was not beaten, and I was fortunate to not get a disease or get pregnant. The next few days I was upset but kept myself busy with work and school to push the memory out of my mind. Even so, I could not deny the feelings of violation against my body and spirit. I began to feel angry all the time. My anger affected my school work, job performance, and personal relationships. I am still sickened to remember how I was pinned down and forced to submit. The worst effect of my rape is the fear I now have of beginning new friendships, and possibly intimate relationships, with men.

Last weekend I ran into an acquaintance. We talked and had a few laughs. When he wanted to be physically intimate, I gently pushed him away without offering an explanation. He ignored my rejection of his advances. He kept trying to pull me to him. I told him that I was not interested in him physically, but that I would like to remain friends. He did not take this well and tried again to pull me to him. I said no again. He asked why. I told him that I had been raped once and that I was still having a difficult time trusting men. But he still would not stop trying. Finally, he left in a huff. That's one example of men who gave up on me because I refused their advances — on first or second encounters or dates, I should add.

I must say that I don't try to dwell on the experience of my rape, but the memory of it creeps into my mind frequently. I try to maintain a healthy attitude toward life. I don't let my rape become an excuse for poor school work or job performance. I try not to view every man as a potential rapist, because I know that there exist men who are of sincere and kind heart. I have had positive sexual and non-sexual relationships with men. However, I cannot overemphasize how angry I feel everyday.

Please, let's all be sensitive to the fact that one out of every three women will be raped in her lifetime. That's a one in three chance that a woman you meet or already know has been sexually assaulted. What I would like to tell men, and women too (because they can be equally pushy as men) is this: Please do not become upset when someone rejects your sexual advances. First, she/he may not be ready for, or may not even want to reciprocate your sexual desires. Second, you never know what the person's reason is for rejecting your advances. In my case, I was raped. I think that's a damn good reason to tell someone to leave me alone. What I would like to know is this: Why should I need to tell someone I was raped before he complies with my request that he stop?

Editor, Daily Nexus:

So, you attempted to cover your asses by printing an article about the unreported sexual harassments and then the 'major mishaps' editorial. Why is it that your left hand does not know what the right hand is doing, and get this information from the start before writing that there were "no major mishaps" on Halloween? Since your editorial suggests you might actually care, we suggest a "Nexus Commission on the Status of Women." This group could educate your staff on issues of concern to women and men concerning discrimination and violence against women in ads such as Gold's Gym's headless body, degrading language used in the ads by The Graduate looking for a "doorman or doorgirl", Moo Shi Factory's special meal for "college girls," and make sure someone checks with informed officials before stating that nothing major happened after a large event.

Preparation for such large events as Halloween is everyone's obligation, students, administrators, campus groups, and even campus newspapers! We were offended by your sense of blame that no 'street side crisis center' was set up. The A.S. Commission on the Status of Women is alive and well, and we are extremely concerned about the high rate of ignorance in our society that leads to violence, discrimination, and inequality against women. We meet every Wednesday from 4-6 p.m. in Ucen room 3. Everyone is invited to attend. Rape and sex discrimination do not have to be "inevitable," we can stop it!!!

In the Shadow of Houston's Twin Towers

By Scott Channon
Contributing Editor

Last Saturday afternoon, five seconds weren't just any five seconds for an ex-Gaucha.

With five seconds left in the nationally-televised Houston Rockets-Los Angeles Lakers game, Rockets Head Coach Bill Fitch motioned to Conner Henry, who ripped off his sweats to replace Akeem Olajuwon.

Amazing, truly amazing. The year after Conner Henry graduates from UC Santa Barbara he's playing in the first game of the 1986 season for the Houston Rockets, the runners-up in last year's NBA Championships.

Of course, Henry, ever the perfectionist, hoped for more than five seconds.

"Allen Leavell and Robert Reid, the other two point guards, were both getting into foul trouble, so I thought I might get in for an extended period of playing time," Henry said, while relaxing in a Sacramento hotel on Tuesday before a game against the Kings. "As it was, I got five seconds, but it was still very exciting. And playing against the team I rooted for growing up was really exciting."

After Henry signed with the Rockets in pre-season, he made it past a first round of cuts, then a second and finally hung on to make the 12-man roster, dispelling whatever critics he had.

"I've been kind of fighting them (the critics) on and off all my life because I'm skinny and not that strong," Henry said. "Nobody really gave me that much of a chance."

But, to say the least, Henry has made the most of his chances.

"This is without question a dream come true," Henry disclosed. "I don't think it's all set in yet. We're so busy, we travel so much. You almost lose track of the days."

With Ralph Sampson due to return off the injured reserve list in three games, Henry's stay in the NBA could be limited. According to Henry, either himself, forward Lewis Lloyd, guard Steve Harris or forward Richard Anderson (another ex-Gaucha) will be let go. But since Fitch has six guards, Henry feels he's battling with Harris for the final spot.

"They could let me go because I'm paid the least amount on the team, or they could buy somebody's contract."

Since Harris is on a guaranteed contract and Henry is not, Henry appears to be the most expendable. But don't tell him that.

"I'm confident that I'm going to stick," Henry said. "The coaching staff seems to like the way I shoot and handle the ball."

In the fourth round of last year's draft, the Rockets picked up Henry, who, as a 6-foot-7-inch guard, possessed one key feature of the Rockets: height.

"He (Fitch) thinks bigger is better, and I guess that's the trend going on in the NBA right now," Henry said.

Fitch started that trend when he brought together the Twin Towers, 7-foot-4-inch Ralph Sampson and 7-foot Olajuwon. Henry admitted he was slightly in awe at first, but that feeling quickly disappeared.

"Those couple guys make over a million dollars a year and I wasn't expecting them to come up to me and talk to me and show me the ropes. But Ralph and Akeem talk to me just like I've been around a long time. The atmosphere on the team is one I've never experienced before. Everything is so straightforward. Practices are not too tough, but when it's time for the game, everybody comes to play."

Henry had no trouble getting along with one particular player, 1982 UCSB graduate Anderson, who increased his stock with the Rockets last weekend with a big game against the Lakers.

Henry commented on the obvious irony of how two ex-Gauchos could be playing on the same NBA team: "Rich and I, we laugh and joke about it. We kind of kid some of the other players, like 'you don't have two Alabama players on the team, but we have two Santa Barbara players on the team.'"

Even if Henry does not remain with the Rockets, at least he's increased his chances for signing with another NBA squad. In pre-season action, Henry averaged 12 minutes a game and led the team with 64 percent shooting.

"I played well during the pre-season and a number of other teams have spoken highly of me and have talked with my agent," Henry said. "Should I get let go, I think I would have a good chance to get picked up. Otherwise, I could play in the CBA (Continental Basketball Association). But I really don't want to go to the CBA and ride around on 15-hour bus rides the whole time. Hopefully, I'm here to stay."

Doty Tennis Tournament Begins Today at UCSB

The 27th annual UCSB Ed Doty Invitational Tennis Tournament begins today. Top women tennis players from colleges in Arizona, California and Texas will be competing in the match play tournament over the weekend.

"The reputation of the tournament has always been one of national caliber," Lisa Beritzhoff, UCSB's first-year head coach said. "Top schools from different regions are being represented."

Eight of the nine schools competing are nationally ranked. They are USC, Trinity, UC Berkeley, Arizona State, UCLA, Arizona, Texas, and Pepperdine. UCSB is the only school entered in the tournament which is not ranked.

"Our gals are capable of some upsets if they play up to their potential and talent," Beritzhoff said. "Each match we win will show us that we are contenders."

The matches begin at 8 a.m. today and will be played on every court on campus. The finals will be played on the stadium courts Sunday afternoon.

Booters Lose to San Diego, 1-0

Any loss is tough to deal with, but when the referee contributes as much to the loss as the opponent, it's twice as tough. Such was the case Wednesday afternoon in San Diego as the UCSB men's soccer team was victimized by a missing whistle in a 1-0 loss to the University of San Diego.

Both teams played excellent defense throughout the whole game as neither offense could mount a serious attack. But in the 78th minute, the referee made what Head Coach Andy Kuenzli called "a bad technical mistake." He awarded USD a free-kick, but while the Gauchos were setting their defense, USD's Drew Miller put the free-kick past goalie John Guthrie. The referee never blew the whistle allowing Miller to take the kick and the goal should have been disallowed.

The heartbreaking loss dropped the Gauchos to 7-11-3 on the season, while the Toreros improved to 16-2-0, maintaining their number-four ranking in the West.

A disappointed Kuenzli saw his team play a great game, but once again luck showed up on the wrong side of the field. "It was a very unfortunate loss.... I was a little upset by that (call by the referee). Our bad luck seems to continue."

centrated on kills, as she posted 12 of them to lead the Gauchos. Charlotte Mitchel was not far behind with 10 kills of her own.

UCSB meets Cal State Fullerton on their home court on Saturday before returning home for what may be one of the Gauchos' most exciting matches of the season. On Sunday afternoon, PCAA heavyweight UOP will travel to the Events Center in hopes of avenging its one and only loss, a loss which came from the Gauchos earlier this season.

Spikers Dump Anteaters in Three Games

Playing without starting outside hitter Yami Menendez, the UCSB women's volleyball team beat UC Irvine Wednesday night in three games on the Anteater's home court, 15-7, 15-7 and 15-9.

With this most recent win, the Gauchos find themselves tied with San Jose State for third place in the PCAA, boasting a 21-8 record overall and 10-4 conference mark. University of the Pacific leads the conference, followed closely by Hawaii in second place.

According to UCSB Coach Kathy Gregory, junior outside hitter Bonnie Bright did a "good job" of covering for Menendez. Menendez was injured in last Monday's exhibition match between the Gauchos and the Nippon team from Japan.

Gregory was pleased with her team's performance on the road trip. "Overall, our concentration and rhythm was good for an away match," Gregory said.

UCSB Arts & Lectures

New Influences, New Music

Three Generations of American Music, a unique program of compositions by a new breed of American artists, comes to Lotte Lehmann Concert Hall tonight at 8 PM.

Rising out of a tradition of classical and contemporary art, Three Generations of American Music is a vivid sampling of the instruments and influences at work in the new music of this century, from ethnomusicology and Eastern mysticism to electronics.

Musician William Colvig and composer Lou Harrison (on unusual instruments including the African mbira and psaltery) join violinist David Abel, pianist Julie Steinberg and percussionist William Winant in performing the work of contemporary music's "rugged individualists."

"These composers exemplify the pioneering tradition of America," stated William Winant, who assembled the program. "They have reevaluated the art of our culture by exploring new sound sources. They have shaken the shackles of hundreds of years of European influence and looked elsewhere — to Asia, Mexico, Africa, South America and Native American societies — for inspiration."

Attention: Baroqueniks

"Nine hundred mesmerized Baroqueniks just can't be wrong," wrote the San Francisco Examiner music critic after Musica Antiqua Köln lit up the stage with another successful concert. The critic called this German Baroque ensemble "one of the hottest acts in the business" — not the kind of language usually employed when discussing a Baroque sextet. But there is nothing "usual" about Musica Antiqua Köln; they are recognized as the finest German Baroque ensemble performing today, and their ever-popular recordings for Deutsche Grammophon attest to their musical charisma.

Musica Antiqua Köln comes to Campbell Hall on Friday, November 21, with a program that features Italian violin music of the 1700s. Buy your tickets now: three years ago this group sold out Campbell Hall, and their popularity has only increased.

French Impressionism

Pianist Aldo Ciccolini, Italian born but French by residence and musical speciality, captures the shifting moods, lyricism and poetry of French piano music. His famed recordings of Erik Satie, which have become collectors' items, pushed him across the limits of concert music stardom and helped him acquire a following outside of classical music circles.

Ciccolini will give a special holiday season concert in Campbell Hall on Tuesday, December 2. He will play two works by Maurice Ravel, "Miroirs" and "Valses nobles et sentimentales," plus "Pictures at an Exhibition" by Modest Mussorgsky.

THREE GENERATIONS OF AMERICAN MUSIC

China's Faces

Of particular interest in contemporary films from China are the many portrayals of China's diverse populations. A&L's Sunday evening series, Films from Japan and the People's Republic of China, continues with three more viewpoints on China past and present.

Rickshaw Boy (November 9) is a 1920s period piece that vividly describes the cycle of poverty faced by a young worker in pre-revolutionary China. Broken Moon (November 16) focuses on a widow, her family and the emotional struggles that color her life. Sacrificed Youth (November 23), a film by one of China's award-winning woman directors, is about a young woman who leaves the city to work among the people of the Dai Minority region during the Cultural Revolution.

Tibetan Lama Lectures

The Venerable Sogyal Rinpoche, a Tibetan Lama, is an internationally recognized Buddhist teacher and scholar, thoroughly trained in the different schools of Tibetan Buddhism as well as traditional Western higher education. He has traveled to the West with His Holiness the XIV Dalai Lama of Tibet and other Buddhist leaders.

Now the Ven. Rinpoche brings his insights directly into contact with existing Western disciplines, notably in the areas of medicine, psychology and the care of the dying. He will give two free lectures in the UCen Pavilion: "The Yoga of Healing and Transformation" on Monday, November 17 and "The Wheel of Life and Death" on Tuesday, November 18.

For More Info.

For more information about any Arts & Lectures event, or to purchase tickets, stop by the A&L Ticket Office in Building 402. To charge tickets by phone, call 961-3535. We're open Monday through Friday, 9 AM to 5 PM.
