State Official Declares Bush as Florida Victor

Palm Beach: Florida state Secretary Harris rejects recounts, stirs controversy.

"It is in our nation's interest that the winner in Florida is truly the person who got the most votes," Lieberman said. He said nobody knows who that would be — although Republicans insist it is Bush and Democrats say Gore.

If the certification stands, Bush would win 271 Electoral College votes — one more than necessary for victory — to 267 for Gore.

UC Campuses Consider Changes to Traditional Summer Schedule

BY BEN EBYAM
Reporter

In anticipation of Tidal Wave II, UCSB administrators are trying to move more students from beaches to classrooms for future summer sessions.

UCSB, UCLA and UC Berkeley have initiated talks focusing on changes to their summer session schedules, which could include switching from a six-week to a 10-week summer session and adding two- to three-week "turbo sessions." The Summer Sessions Task Force (SSTF) is also considering options to improve financial aid during summer and increase the number of faculty.

These measures would accommodate increased enrollment, which is important in alleviating overcrowding of students in the future, Chancellor Henry Yang said.

"UC is preparing for what's been called 'Tidal Wave II' — an expected surge in the number of UC-eligible students over the next decade," Yang said. "Larry Hershman, the UC vice president for budget, has said that an expanded summer term is an essential part of the University's plans for accommodating this

Passenger Train Kills Local Pedestrian

An adult Hispanic male was hit and killed by an Amtrak train Saturday morning while walking on train tracks in Montecito.

The passenger train was headed northbound to the Santa Barbara station when the accident occurred, Lt. Mike Burrige, Santa Barbara Sheriff's Dept. public information officer, said.

"It was Saturday at 11:35 [a.m.] on a northbound Amtrak. It hit a pedestrian walking on the tracks in the Montecito area," he said. "The conductor tried to stop but he was unable to. Deputies responded and the person was obviously deceased."

Burrige said Santa Barbara police have identified the victim, but his name will not be released until his next of kin is notified. Officials have not yet determined why the victim was on the tracks, but have not ruled out suicide. No Amtrak crew or passengers on the train were injured in the accident.

Amtrak spokesperson Karina VanVeen said the conductor attempted to engage the emergency break when he saw the pedestrian, but the train could not stop in time.

"The track speed was 45 miles per hour because it's right outside a station, and the conductor was going 45," she said. "It takes a minimum of one minute for the trains to stop because of the force behind the engine. Unfortunately, they can't stop immediately like cars. Oftentimes, by the time a conductor sees a car or person on the tracks, it's already too late. The conductor did throw it into emergency, which is the emergency break, but unfortunately it was too late."

The train was delayed for approximately 45 minutes after the accident. Amtrak will be conducting its own investigation, but will work closely with the Santa Barbara Sheriff's Dept, Van Veen said.

According to Burrige, accidents involving pedestrians and trains happen often.

"It happens all the time," he said. "It's a common thing. Unfortunately, people walk on the tracks and get hurt."

Editor of 'Chicken Soup' Book Series Encourages Students to Explore Life

BY ELIZABETH WERHANE
Staff Writer

Editor's Note: the following are excerpts from an interview with Chicken Soup for the Soul series editor Jack Canfield.

Though he now lives in Santa Barbara, Jack Canfield grew up in Ohio and West Virginia, later attending Harvard University on a scholarship. He continued his education, earning a master's degree at the University of Chicago and a doctorate in education at the University of Massachusetts. He is president of the Canfield Training Group, regularly speaking on personal growth, management, holistic education and peak performance. He has been author and/or editor of 33 best-selling books, including the growing Chicken Soup for the Soul series.

Nexus: How did the Chicken Soup for the Soul series get started?

Canfield: Myself and my writing partner, Mark Victor Hansen, [and other friends], would meet for breakfast on Tuesday mornings at the Beverly Hills Hotel. One morning Mark said to me, "What are you doing?" "Well, I've got this idea. I want to take all these stories that I use in my talks. I just want to put them together in a book without all the 'you ought to's' in between." You know, and therefore, based on the story you ought to call your mother, exercise more — all this stuff that people tell you you ought to do. I just wanted to put the stories out and let them stand alone to see what kind of impact they would have on people's lives.

And Mark said, "Gee, I want to do that with you." At first I was a little reluctant because I was already about halfway through with the book, but I said, "Send me 30 stories up and if I like them, we'll do this together." They were great stories. This has been a marriage made in heaven.

At the end of the first book, there was a blank page. ... The publisher said, "there's a blank page left in the book. Do you want to use it for anything?" We said, "well, let's just put "if you have a story send it in." Little did we know what we were unleashing, but we started getting sometimes 300 stories a day in the mail and over the Internet, e-mail and fax machines. ... Now we have 35 books in the series. ... I think we have 65 of 180 votes on Bush. She said Bush had 2,912,790 votes and Gore had 2,912,253. That gave Bush a 537-vote lead out of 6 million cast.

Her declaration set off cheers at the capitol in Austin, Texas:

"Accordingly, on behalf of the state elections canvassing commission and in accordance with the laws of the state of Florida, I hereby declare Governor George W. Bush the winner of Florida's 25 electoral votes," Harris said.

The votes were due to Harris by 5 p.m. EST, a deadline set by the state Supreme Court, which allowed the hand recounts to go on.

David Boies, lead lawyer for Democrat Gore's campaign, said the certification would be challenged Monday on at least three grounds, probably more, all involving incomplete recounting or votes he said had been tallied for the vice president at some point and later discounted.

In Palm Beach, Gore gained 180 votes in the partial filing of disputed hand recounts.

Hand recounting of machine-cast ballots in heavily Democratic Broward County, the Fort Lauderdale area, also had narrowed the Bush edge.

Bush led by 930 votes before the recounting in those counties. Absentee ballots from U.S. military abroad added votes to his soon. "We're now in a two-week-or-so period in which you have a contest on both sides of this election," said Rep. Richard A. Gephardt, the House minority leader.

"What they're trying to do is overturn every rock, looking for more Gore votes, extend this as long as possible," said Gov. George Pataki of New York, one of the politicians both sides have summoned to Florida show it.

"I've talked with most of my colleagues over the last several days, and there isn't any interest in conceding anything at this point," Daschle said.

There are court challenges in Florida on both sides, with more to come when courthouses open today. The U.S. Supreme Court on Friday will hear Bush's case against a state Supreme Court recount decision. Gore lawyers said they will challenge certification of a Bush lead by Harris.

Bush has the option of dropping his appeal to the Supreme Court should he be certified the winner. That seemed unlikely because it would concede to Gore the recounted votes that put the vice president closer to winning a post-certification challenge to the count.

"I think both sides have decided to take this election beyond the certification," Daschle said. "Whether or not [Harris] makes any pronouncement [Sunday] is not really relevant."

We shouldn't have a rush to judgment. ... Rather, we should be on a path toward justice.

Democratic Sen.-elect Bill Nelson said Americans do not want "an election that they feel like has been rigged or has not fully been counted."

"We shouldn't have a rush to judgment," he said. "Rather, we should be on a path toward justice."

Democratic congressional leaders said nothing would be settled Sunday or to watch the recounting and talk about it.

Pataki said on CBS's "Face the Nation" that he believes Bush won and that the Democrats are trying to recount him out of victory.

Sen. Tom Daschle of South Dakota, the Senate's Democratic leader, said on NBC's "Meet the Press" that he "truly" believes Gore won Florida and that a full, fair recount would

Secretary of State Rejects Palm Beach Recounts

WEST PALM BEACH, Fla. (AP) — Secretary of State Katherine Harris rejected Palm Beach County's hand recount Sunday, throwing out 180 votes Al Gore would have picked up in his struggle against George W. Bush.

The partial returns counted by hand "fail to comply" with state law, Harris said before she certified Bush as the winner of Florida's drawn-out election. She instead accepted results from the last machine count, on Nov. 14.

"Unbelievable," Palm Beach County elections supervisor Theresa LePore said as she watched Harris on television. LePore designed the now-infamous "butterfly ballot" that some Democrats say was so confusing that it cost Gore thousands of votes in this heavily Democratic county.

The three-member board worked around the clock in hopes of completing its review before a 5 p.m. deadline. After Harris rejected their request for more time to finish counting 800 to 1,000 ballots, they faxed the incomplete results — dozens of pages of raw, precinct-by-precinct figures, leaving the tedious math to the secretary of state.

That done, canvassers went back to work and finished their marathon review of questionable presidential ballots two hours later. Red-eyed and weary, election workers hugged each other and smiled when the counting was done. The county planned to submit amended totals.

"I don't know what another two and a half hours would have meant, but why not?" asked a frustrated Charles Burton, the head of canvassing board. "We all want to finish the job we started to do."

Rep. Peter Deutsch (D-Fla.) said Democrats were not conceding Florida: "All that Vice President Gore has asked for, and the people of America have asked for, is a fair and accurate count of every vote."

The Palm Beach board met virtually nonstop through the weekend in hopes of completing a recanvass of some 14,000 questionable ballots. The board lost a crucial day when it took Thanksgiving off.

Palm Beach was one of four Democratic-leaning counties where Gore asked for a manual recount as part of his effort to overtake Republican Bush in the state that stands to pick the president.

Yugoslavian Forces Threaten to Renew Attacks on Kosovo

BUJANOVAC, Yugoslavia (AP) — Yugoslav's army sent tanks and reinforcements near the NATO-patrolled boundary with Kosovo on Sunday, one day before Yugoslavia's deadline for NATO to crack down on ethnic Albanian militants whose attacks have inflamed the region.

Kosovo is a province of Serbia, Yugoslavia's main republic, but it has been under international control since last year, and many residents want full independence. In the three-mile buffer zone between central Serbia and Kosovo, attacks by independence-minded militants last week left at least four Serb policemen dead.

Yugoslav authorities set a Monday afternoon deadline for NATO to clear out the militants from the boundary region. They have threatened to launch counterattacks after the deadline passes.

In Kosovo, the local television station reported that one ethnic Albanian fighter was wounded in the contested area Sunday but gave no further details. The ethnic Albanians declared their own unilateral ceasefire Friday, but it expires at midnight Sunday.

The crisis erupted last week when militants, believed to be operating from heavily ethnic Albanian Kosovo, killed the Serb policemen and seized key positions just across the boundary from the NATO-patrolled province.

Their action provoked a major crisis for the new government of Yugoslav President Vojislav Kostunica, which took power last month after the collapse of Slobodan Milosevic. The offensive could undermine Kostunica's rule by portraying him as incapable of dealing with ethnic Albanian extremists. However, if Serb police fight back with massive force, they risk a serious incident with NATO.

The attacks were carried out by the so-called "Liberation Army of Presevo, Medvedja and Bujanovac." The rebels want to drive Serb forces from the Presevo Valley, the adjacent Serb region, and unite it with Kosovo.

Weather

I am fat.

I went to the gym last night, and I saw a lot of other fat people there, trying to work off all the crap they ate over break. Do you know how many damn stairs you have to climb to work off three separate Thanksgiving dinners? A lot. I gave up, went home, and did a beerpong with the weathermates. I'm the only one who realized that 90 percent of the fat people I saw in the gym will have quit working out by next week, but all of us will still be fat.

Monday's forecast: Foggy morning will give way to highs in the mid 70s in the afternoon, perfect weather for a run. Fat chance.

million books in print in 33 languages all over the world. [Currently, we receive] 100 to 300 [stories] in the U.S. mail, and then it could be anywhere from 500 to 2000 over e-mail. I'd say the majority of those come from teenagers — they have more free time.

I doubt many people plan on being a motivational speaker and writer. When you were in college what did you expect your future to hold?

I majored in Chinese history. I went to college thinking I was going to be a lawyer and get involved in government. ... I've always been intrigued with global things; world peace has been something that's a high priority for me. ...

I realized in law school, after I was there for a year, that I didn't really want to do that route. ... My senior year I took an elective class in psychology. ... It was all about human interactions. It just intrigued me at a level that I had never been intrigued by anything in my life. It was my life path as it were. So I started studying psychology and education in graduate school and ended up as a high school teacher for a number of years. ... I eventually became a therapist.

What advice would you offer students who haven't figured out their "life path"?

Keep exploring. In other words, the only way you find out if you like a food is if you taste it. Lean into lots of things. If you take a sociology class and it excites you, take another one. If it doesn't, try something else.

A lot of famous people didn't find their right livelihood until well into their 20s, 30s, 40s sometimes.

I think the main thing is, everything you engage in, do the best you can because everything you do will lead you somewhere else, and by doing it well you'll learn skills that you can always use no matter where you go — whether its research or networking or just being the president of your fraternity or sorority or the captain of the team or working on a political campaign or some project in the university where you're trying to get something done. All those things build competency, but you never know what you're going to need later.

I would always say that everything I've studied in my life has been preparation to be where I am. ... I think that the main thing is just explore. Take the summer off and go to Mexico. Travel. See things. Meet people. Go to lectures. Take up an instrument and see if you like it. And there'll be a lot of dead ends, but so what?

I always think it's like being in Rome, where you're going around one of those circles where there's about 18 different roads that go off it and you might have to try all 18. And if you're lucky, the first road is your path and you never want to leave it because you're so fulfilled. For other people it's the 18th road. So what? You gotta try the roads.

Certainly don't compare yourself to those people that are fortunate. You know, people who knew when they were 10 that they wanted to be a concert pianist or an engineer or an actor or a musician or whatever, and God bless those people, but if you compare yourself to them and feel inadequate because you're not clear, that's a mistake.

Your books are written to encourage others, but what discourages you?

What discourages me is prejudice and ignorance, but I know as a psychologist that all of that is based on conditioning from childhood. All the Republicans I know, their parents were Republicans. All the Democrats I know, their parents were Democrats. We grow up just kind of conditioned by our environment.

I think the real job of growth is to slowly let go of the belief systems that we took on from parenting, school and

Do as We Say

Global Warming Talks Fail Due to Obstinate Stance of the U.S.

If any of you were searching for real news this weekend, you would have had to wade through all the "who the hell cares anymore?" coverage of the presidential race. Every major media source gorged itself with a Thanksgiving-sized helping of Bush vs. Gore rhetoric and didn't save any room for actual newsworthy events. However, if you did venture into the depths of the newspaper on Sunday, you would have found a very small amount of space devoted to a very significant collapse in negotiations at the United Nations World Climate Change Conference.

For the past two weeks, delegates from 180 nations have met in The Hague to reach an agreement on global reductions in greenhouse gas emissions. Negotiations fell apart Saturday, primarily due to a lack of consensus between the United States and the European Union. The failure to reach an agreement is a major setback in achieving reduction levels agreed upon in the 1997 Kyoto protocol. But, while Europe was portrayed as inflexible and unreasonable by American media, it was the United States itself who acted in an obstinate and bullheaded manner throughout these so-called "negotiations."

In 1997, the same 180 nations met in Japan to establish emission limits for greenhouse gases. The agreement aimed at cutting emissions by over 5 percent from 1990 levels by 2008-2012. Environmentalists saw the Kyoto agreement as a victory when it was signed by all 180 nations in 1997, however, only 30 have so far ratified it. The latest conference in The Hague was needed to hammer out the rules for how these cuts could be achieved and to increase the number of nations ratifying the treaty. From the first day of the conference, it was clear that the United States had definite plans for how these levels would be reached — by piggybacking on the reductions made by other nations.

SHADI MUKLASHY / DAILY NEXUS

The United States claimed the only way it could comply with the Kyoto restrictions was through emissions trading — buying pollution credits from countries that easily meet the emissions limits. However, the EU-U.S. dispute was mainly over a U.S. plan to offset the atmospheric carbon dioxide soaked up by forests and agricultural lands, against their emissions target. The United States seems to have very little interest in reforming its transportation and energy policies to cut pollution levels. What's the point if you can buy your way to an environmentally friendly status?

The United States is the wealthiest nation in the world and also the largest polluter. Only 4 percent of the world's population lives in this country, yet we manage to produce 25 percent of the world's pollution. The attitude of the U.S. delegates at this latest global warming conference was typical of the stance we often take in international treaty negotiations, such as nuclear non-proliferation and land mines: Do as we say, not as we do. To attribute the failure in negotiations to the European resistance in allowing U.S. loopholes, completely ignores the uncompromising position that Americans continue to adopt.

As a global superpower and superpolluter, we have the greatest responsibility to make these negotiations a success. The duty is now upon the American people to pressure the government — whichever one it may be — to come up with some real strategies for reducing greenhouse gas emissions. Because, although the United States does not often have to face global consequences for its failure to negotiate international treaties, this time it has just as much to lose from global climate change as any other country in the world.

Bush Wins; Bring on the Horsemen of the Apocalypse

BRENDAN BUHLER

"You can't have nice things."

That's what I said on Nov. 8 to explain why George W. Bush would be the next president. I caught shit from my fellow neo-commie leftist fruit-loops. "What about the popular vote?! What about voting irregularities?! What about justice?! This will not stand! Jesse Jackson is involved!"

I just nodded. No point arguing with fools — especially when you borrow money from them.

But now Bush is pretty much elected (attn. Gore legal team: You can't have nice things) and it's over. It's all over. Kiss everything goodbye, kiddies. The bad moon has risen, and for the next four years the werewolf of a Bush presidency is going to leap on America's neck, howling madly, slobbering profusely and spraying out crimson giblets with every shake of its greedy maw. Anyone who thought Reagan was bad is not prepared for the vile shit about to go down.

Reagan won in one night and faced a Democratic congress. Election Night 2000 is 19 days and counting. The Republicans are the congressional majority, and they want tax breaks and virgin sacrifices. I fully expect our next Supreme Court justice to be Walt Disney's head mounted on the mechanically enhanced body of Mussolini.

Bush spent more corporate money than any other candidate ever has, most of it from grease-oil-drills-in-Alaska-with-baby-seal-blood types. And then there are the people who ran the Bush campaign and will run the White House.

Let's take a moment now to get to know them, before the inevitable indictments.

SHADI MUKLASHY / DAILY NEXUS

Karl Rove (Bush campaign consultant): In Texas, they call him "Bush's Brain," and he isn't even offended. He spent his college days as a self-described "diehard Nixonite," which is somehow more respectable than "diehard Satanist." From 1991 to 1996 he consulted for Philip Morris, quitting when it came time to elect Bush as governor. In that race he limited Bush's public speaking, avoiding any subliminal messages. In other Texas races, Rove was fond of complaining to the FBI that the opposition was spying on Republicans, forcing the feds to start investigating — and then Rove leaked word of the investigation to the press.

Barry McBee (Bush appointee to the Texas Natural Resources Conservation Committee): TNRCC is the Texas version of the Environmental Protection Agency

(EPA). These are the boys responsible for Houston's chunky-style air. In the last six years, TNRCC has sided with industry against federal air-quality health standards. McBee worked in the last Bush administration and is a fair bet to be the guy in charge of the EPA in Bushland. When McBee was deputy director of the Texas Department of Agriculture, he gutted regulations requiring farmers to warn workers before spraying fields. McBee is an ultradevout Christian, who once launched into a sermon on love and mercy before a landfill vote. God loves a trash heap.

Dick Cheney (our new vice president): Dickey Boy has a remarkable voting record for napalm-strafting those who can't speak for themselves. In the Senate, he voted against every conceivable poverty package, the EPA, the Dept. of Education and the economic embargo on apartheid South Africa. He was secretary of defense for W.'s daddy. Since then, he made well over $30 million in the oil industry. Cheney ran Bush's VP selection committee and ultimately selected himself.

Here's the thing: The Democratic Party is responsible for just about everything Americans are about to get, good and hard. They nominated an uninspired, chameleon-like hack named Al Gore. The Democrats sold everyone on the left down the river in a steady shift toward conservatism in a desperate bid to compete with Republicans on their own turf, and then had the balls to blame liberals for voting Nader or not at all. It is the Democratic Party's fault that the gates to hell are about to open wide.

The line, as always, forms to the right.

This is the end, my only friend, the end of our elaborate plans, because you can't have nice things. Except for Assistant Campus Editor Brendan Buhler's column, "Black Box."

religion and say 'OK, that's what I was taught. I was conditioned in that. Now let me explore and examine that. Is that what I want to choose? And then if you choose those same beliefs, fabulous. But if you don't, give yourself permission to go and explore other beliefs so you find what matches you.

I grew up ... [knowing] my job in life was to be of service to others. There's been a great deal of satisfaction that's come from that. But at the same time, there's been a great deal of self-denial that's come from that that over the years in my own therapy. I find that more and more some of my generosity is a 'should,' not a 'want to,' so I've spent the last couple of years sorting out where I want to put my time, where I want to put my money, where I want to put my energy, and responding to this internal desire to make a difference that matters to me instead of just to do it for the sake of doing good.

Why did you choose to live in Santa Barbara?

I was so drawn to California. There was something about the culture out here. It was freer. The people were more exploratory. There was more going on in the human potential movement. There were more leaders and centers, institutes exploring human potential, what we can do, what are the limits of our capabilities, spiritual growth, emotional growth, intellectual growth, and so I came out literally to run a workshop in Marin County, and I just fell in love with the place. ...

We looked at La Jolla, and we looked at Santa Barbara and we came up, and we spent long weekends ... just exploring the town. Santa Barbara won hands down.

It's just so amazing to have the mountains, the ocean, the university; there's a lot of money here so there's a lot of culture. ... It met a lot of our needs, and I just feel vibrationally when I'm here, I feel relaxed, I feel at home, I feel at peace.

If you could accomplish one more thing in your life, what would it be?

There's two things really. We have a goal for our book series to sell a billion books by the year 2020. Not because that means anything, but because we believe that if you set a huge goal that's almost unattainable, it forces you to grow in order to be able to achieve it.

For us, it's forcing us to think bigger, to get out of the box of only selling books through bookstores and so forth and to trust that if we reach that many people, and we give away 50 cents a book that will be half a billion dollars for charity ... and we've reached a large portion of the planet in terms of having made a difference in their lives.

Secondly, what I'd like to accomplish is to make a difference in the education system in America. Too many kids that aren't just the typical A-student type of person get lost between the cracks. I think it's a loss to our culture of a lot of talent and a lot of aliveness, a lot of skills and a lot of people that we need to make the whole thing work.

I've always been of the position that everybody in the world is like a cell in a body. Some people are kidney cells, some people are brain cells, some people are muscle cells, some people may just be a toenail, but the point is, you need that toenail.

I like to think that the schools could identify that and help everyone find their [place]. ... I'd like to see the schools acknowledge a greater range of talent.

PHILOSOPHY 7
BIOMEDICAL ETHICS
WINTER 2001

This course will deal with moral controversies that arise in a medical setting. The issues to be examined are human cloning, surrogate motherhood, abortion, physician assisted suicide, euthanasia, defining death, personal identity, organ procurement, lying to patients, and decision making for the incompetent. If time permits, we will also investigate ethical issues concerning patient privacy, the use of human subjects in experimental trials, and the economic impact that HMOs have recently had on the doctor-patient relationship. The student's final grade for the course will be the result of a multiple choice midterm, a multiple choice final exam, and a 6-8 page term paper. The course meets the GE writing requirement. All the required readings are in a course reader that will be available from the GrafikARTS Copy Center in Isla Vista for approximately $20. Students who are unable to register because the course has filled up should come to the class in the first week in order to pick up an add code. For more information, contact the instructor through the philosophy department in South Hall or by e-mail at dbh1@umail.ucsb.edu

CELEBRITIES BORN ON THIS DAY: Robin Givens, Bruce Lee, Jimi Hendrix, Caroline Kennedy Schlossberg, Fisher Stevens

Happy Birthday: This is your year to pick up the slack and do all you can. Don't waste time on trivial matters; instead, pick projects that will make a difference to you and to your future. Face each challenge with a positive, energetic attitude and see how quickly you excel. Push yourself to the limit and you will succeed. Your numbers: 3, 8, 14, 22, 35, 41

ARIES (March 21-April 19): Put your emotional problems on the back burner today. More immediate dilemmas concerning your job are at hand. You may want to discuss your direction with a close friend or relative. 3 stars

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): You will have the stamina to put in the hours it will take to complete an important job. Your loved ones may not fully understand your position if you don't explain its importance. 3 stars

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): You will not take criticism lightly. Before you jump to conclusions or retaliate, take a step back and view the situation from a more objective position. You are a little erratic today. 2 stars

CANCER (June 21-July 22): It's time to do some soul-searching. You are so reluctant to let go of the past that you are holding yourself back. You should be out having new experiences and meeting new people. 3 stars

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): Don't hesitate to lead when dealing with group functions. You are the best at delegating who does what. You will attract romantic partners easily. 5 stars

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): Don't take life too seriously today. If you are stubborn and refuse to let a good friend be himself or herself, you may lose the friendship. You have to be understanding, not judgmental, in emotional situations. 2 stars

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): Communication will help clear up confusing issues. Use your ability to pick up knowledge rapidly and attend informative seminars. 4 stars

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): Take the time to help someone who has been less fortunate than you. Legalities will appear to be more pressing today. Try not to be forced into signing documents you are uneasy about. 3 stars

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): Your outgoing nature and self-confidence will attract both friends and lovers. Opportunities to get involved in competitive activities should spark your interest. 3 stars

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): Don't mix business with pleasure. You will not be in the mood to please both client and lover. You will also put yourself in a position to ruin your reputation with colleagues. 3 stars

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): Make those personal changes you had in mind. It's time to get in shape. Love interests are blossoming, and the thought of having children is stronger. 4 stars

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): This can be a profitable day if you concentrate on work or career changes. It is best to keep your thoughts to yourself. Someone close at hand may steal your idea. 2 stars

Birthday Baby: You have the energy and drive to help you accomplish plenty throughout your life. You can make a difference if you believe in yourself and your abilities. The harder the task, the more enthusiastic you will become.

SUMMER

enrollment surge."

A key to increased enrollment is improved financial aid, since many students attending summer school must pay for living costs they would not have at home, Financial Aid Director Veronica O'Dette said. Students in past years had to use remaining funds for summer financial aid. Beginning in 2001, summer students can receive additional grants and loans during summer session.

"The whole [change in] summer sessions is going to have a major impact on financial aid, mainly because the financial aid recipients were only those students who had remaining eligibility from the school year," she said.

There is also an expected shift from Santa Barbara City College professors teaching summer session classes to more UCSB professors. Bob Kuntz, co-chair of the SSTF, said he hopes professors will disperse their research throughout the year in order to spend more time teaching summer sessions.

"The emphasis will be on increasing the number of UCSB professors that teach during summer sessions," he said. "Right now there is mainly a lot of research done during the summer."

More faculty teachers would contribute to a greater enrollment in the university, Yang said.

"One way for UCSB to enroll more students, without going over the cap set by our Long Range Development Plan, is for us to move toward offering more courses taught by our ladder faculty," he said. "This would give our students the opportunity to complete their degree requirements sooner and to take those courses in the Summer Quarter that are in particularly high demand during the Fall, Spring and Winter Quarters."

The SSTF has not made any definite plans, however.

"No final decisions have been made about any change to summer sessions. At this point there has been a task force that has been meeting since last spring," Kuntz said. "I don't mean to rule anything out, it's just that no decision has been made."

Despite the task force's steady efforts, such as daily meetings, reviews and planning, major changes will not occur this summer. Kuntz expects increased enrollment from graduating seniors needing more units or incoming freshmen wanting to get a head start, Kuntz said.

"No radical changes will be made to the coming summer session. We will be making every effort to increase the enrollment, but any significant changes would be beginning summer sessions 2002," he added.

The success of summer sessions depends on a plan to increase both funding and staff, O'Dette said.

"I think that they are excellent ideas, and if we get the funding, and if we get the staffing, it will be excellent for the students," she said. "But one without the other will not work."
