Sedgwick Debate Ends: Gardner Pledges Funds

$1 Million Will Be Donated for Art Museum

By Morgan Freeman
Staff Writer

After months of heated debate and on-campus furor, UCSB administrators announced Monday they will preserve the university's portion of the Sedgwick Ranch, reversing highly controversial plans to sell the lush woodland property.

The 5,866 prized acres — home to three varieties of oak and at least two rare natural vernal pools — was going to be sold to generate money for a new campus art museum, but the plan was scratched last week after UC President David Gardner announced his decision to provide funding for the museum.

Gardner announced that the Office of the President will provide UCSB $1 million for the art museum and ongoing maintenance at the ranch. In order to get the money, however, UCSB must first match Gardner's pledge with $1 million of its own, according to a UC press release.

Gardner is "personally interested" in preserving the ranch for UCSB because of "his days at UCSB.... He was an administrator on campus (and) is familiar with the intentions of the donors," according to Rick Malaspina, assistant director for news services for the president's office.

The source of the $1 million to be given to UCSB is "undeter-

Revised Plans for University Growth Meet with Approval

By Dylan Callaghan
Staff Writer

Initial response to the university's newly revised Long Range Development Plan, released for a 45-day public review Monday, appears to be generally positive from faculty, students and community members.

The LRDP sets the university's goals for expansion through the academic year 2005-6. It calls for 62-percent physical growth and a maximum enrollment of 20,000. The current LRDP revision consists of three books — nearly four and a half inches of unnumbered pages.

The plan was revised after a November release for public review drew harsh criticism. Approximately 3,000 public suggestions were recorded, causing the administration to return to the drawing board for nearly six months and miss the deadline set with the UC Board of Regents.

Among the criticisms of the November version were allegations that the plan was insensitive

Commencement Ceremonies Too Full, Students Left Out

By Laura Pitter
Staff Writer

An estimated 30 seniors will be unable to participate in their appropriate commencement ceremonies this weekend due to an unprecedented number of students wishing to take part in this year's seven separate processions, according to university officials.

Both the Social Science I and II ceremonies are full because almost 1,000 more students are considered seniors this year than last year.

"There were substantially more students to deal with but the same number of ceremonies," said Carolyn Buford, UCSB's commencement information coordinator.

The Dean of Students Office mailed 5,800 commencement information packets to every student with 155 units or more in January, according to Buford.

Additionally, a higher percentage of eligible seniors chose to go through ceremonies this year. Next weekend, 3,647 students will participate in ceremonies, while only 3,235 participated last spring.

"This is the biggest graduation class ever.... We have two and one-half hours (during each ceremony) to push them across the stage," Buford said.

Some of the overcrowding was created because too many impacted majors are in the same ceremonies, according to Buford. Ceremonies are limited to 900, but the Sunday 9 a.m. Social Sciences II ceremony has been extended to accommodate 1,011 students, and the Saturday 4 p.m. Social Sciences I ceremony will now accommodate 910 students, she said.

Several students had to be moved into the Social Sciences III

Greek Judicial Council: Phi Sig Song Promotes Sexism, Violates Policy

By Amy Collins
Staff Writer

An internal greek judicial council determined last month that Phi Sigma Kappa fraternity violated university principles by promoting sexism when some of their members sang "Phi Sig Raiders" during fall 1989 serenading.

As punishment, the Greek Peer Review Board ruled that the chapter give a five to 10 minute talk on sexism to each fraternity and sorority next fall. The chapter must also "produce a page on the issues of sexism from both the men and women's perspective, including a section on serenading, which will be submitted to every chapter for inclusion in their respective pledge/associate member manuals."

The matter was referred to the nine-member GPRB after an investigation by the UCSB Dean of Students office concluded that the fraternity had not violated any university policies. The university initiated the review after three women, joined by more than 60 protestors, held a press conference in front of the fraternity's Cordoba Road chapter house on April 18 accusing the members of racism and sexism.

Although members of the greek community believe the sanctions are fair, the women who authored the complaint are dissatisfied. "They're slapping them on the hands," Andi Blackshaw said.

"The people who were making these decisions were from within the greek system. It's not like they brought in some objective body," she added.

"I don't think (the sanctions are) adequate and I don't think they're severe enough.... I would like to see social probation for a year, and I would also like to see some sort of public apology," Kerry Church said.

The GPRB also recommended that "Panhellenic and IFC will inform the university that the greek system supports a universitywide task force on racism and sexism," which was one of the original requests made at the press conference.

Further, the GPRB recommended that "the greek system will create a community standard promoting the elimination of sexism, racism, heterosexism, violence against women and other forms of oppression."

Phi Sig President Kevin Coordt said he is glad the incident may bring positive change. "I feel the GPRB hearing was very thorough. I am pleased to see that their decision recommends many systemwide changes, all of which

University Police Dept. Employee Arrested on Charges of Embezzling

By Tony Pierce
Staff Writer

A UCSB Police Department administrative assistant will be arraigned Thursday on charges that she allegedly embezzled between $1,000 and $1,500 from the department between July 1989 and January 1990.

Viola Rita Valdez, 33, was arrested May 17 after the department concluded that she may have been responsible for missing cash deposits, but has not yet been charged by the Santa Barbara County District Attorney.

Valdez was responsible for depositing cash received after bicycle auctions and from registration fees, according to UCSB Police Chief John MacPherson. After reviewing an audit completed last January, the department discovered Valdez had not deposited the funds some months, while she only made one deposit during other months.

Valdez began working at UCSB in 1976 as a typist/clerk in the Office of Financial Aid, according to Public Information Officer Margi Weeks. She transferred to the EOP/SAA department after four years, serving as the principal clerk — a position she held for eight years until transferring to the police department June 5, 1988.

Valdez is currently on administrative leave, pending the outcome of the case against her. Whether or not she receives severance compensation will be based on the results of the court trial, MacPherson said. Her salary was $2,146 a month at the time of her suspension.

When asked if it was particularly trying to arrest a fellow cohort, MacPherson paused and said, "The answer is yes. It certainly is difficult."

Valdez, who resides in Santa Barbara, was unavailable for comment.

Car Accident Claims UCSB Freshman in Palm Springs

Flags flew at half mast in front of Cheadle Hall this week in honor of 18-year-old UCSB freshman Amber Newton, killed in an auto accident May 27 in her hometown of Palm Springs, California.

Newton lived at Francisco Torres, was active in a Bible Study group, had been involved with the Alumni Association's "Annual Fund" fundraiser and planned to major in business, according to residence assistant Josephine Lui.

Her ready smile and bouncy attitude will be especially remembered by all of her friends. "Amber was full of life," said Rosie Meza, a close friend. "She never walked down the hall, she skipped. That was Amber."

Archeologist Succumbs to Sickness

Former UCSB archeology professor Albert C. Spaulding died May 29 at Santa Barbara's Cottage Hospital after a long illness. He was 75 years old.

Spaulding came to UCSB in 1966, at the time one of the most highly-esteemed archeologists in the field. While teaching at the University of Michigan in the 1940s, he developed the statistical method of data collection that is now standard in archeology.

Among his achievements while at UCSB was a four-year term as dean of the College of Letters and Science from 1967 to 1971. Spaulding continued teaching until his retirement in 1983, when he was granted the status of professor emeritus in the anthropology department.

Spaulding received several awards during his career, including the Society for American Archeology Distinguished Service Award in 1981 and a 50th Anniversary Award for outstanding contributions to the field in 1985.

"We're going to miss him terribly," said anthropology department Chair Michael A. Jochim. "He was a unique man in his field, and a major figure in archeology throughout the country. He was also an exceptionally nice man."

Weather

Well, graduation certainly deserves good weather, really good weather, metaphorically good "the rest of your life will be sunny now that you have a degree" weather. Unfortunately, the poor, lowly, nose to the grindstone, "We've got years to go" Freshman have just as much a right to some solid metaphorical weather. The seagulls are already forming in groups, adjusting their diets to provide some good metaphor laden rain on the old commencement. Not that there won't be plenty of that kind of rain coming from a more traditional source, the platform. Between now and graduation, the weather will be a very unsurprising, unhelpful, beautiful dry heat. Unless it rains.

Dedicated Teaching Assistants Receive Awards for Excellence

By Paul J. Covington
Staff Writer

Three of UCSB's most dedicated TAs were awarded the Graduate Student Association Teaching Assistant Excellence Awards at the final GSA meeting Tuesday night.

The three TAs receiving this year's honors, Jim Egan, Mark Kumler and Dan Sparks, were selected from categories representing the humanities, social sciences, and physical sciences — including math and engineering — respectively, according to GSA Academic Vice President Doug Gurevitch.

Sixty-two of UCSB's approximately 700 TAs were nominated for this year's award, according to Gurevitch. The award carries a $1,000 stipend, raised from last year's award of $250, which may have contributed to the higher number of nominees over previous years, Gurevitch added.

Reaction among the winning TAs varied. Jim Egan, a TA in the English department, said he "wondered if they had gotten it right," when he heard his name called. "There are a lot of good TAs in the English department and in the humanities, so I was surprised and flattered they picked me," Egan said.

Egan — who is currently working on a doctorate in early American literature and literary theory — believes he was selected because students appreciate the comments he makes on their papers, and his accessibility.

"Hearing your students say, 'Oh, now I get it!' is the most rewarding thing about teaching."

Mark Kumler

Mark Kumler, who is currently studying cartography in the geology department, won the award while only in his second year at UCSB. Kumler said he was "quite surprised" to win.

The most important function of a TA, Kumler said, is "to show enthusiasm for the course material and to encourage students to learn for themselves. Hearing your students say, 'Oh, now I get it!' is the most rewarding thing about teaching," he added.

Dan Sparks, currently working toward a master's degree in physiology, was the winner in the physical sciences. Sparks said that

"biology is one of those things where there's a finite amount of knowledge you can get across."

"You can tell when the students understand it and when they don't. As long as you're in there pushing to help them understand it, that is what is important."

The selection process for this year's award began when nomination forms were filled out by students and professors earlier this year, Gurevitch said, adding that anyone can nominate a TA.

All TAs nominated submit an account of their workload to a GSA committee, comprised of four graduate students, which then reviews the letters and prepares a short list of nominees. The committee then asks permission to see all of the TAs' evaluation forms, which are reviewed along with the nomination letters, from which the final selections are made, Gurevitch concluded.

The GSA gives these awards each year because "it is important to point out people who are going above and beyond their duties," Gurevitch said.

Added GSA External President Reinhart Lutz: "We really want to show our massive appreciation of our graduate students, and we want to send the message to the campus community that the GSA takes teaching very, very seriously."

POLICE REPORT

Please Don't Hurt 'Em, Hammer

A 23-year-old local man was arrested by police May 25 after he allegedly attacked and injured another local man during a dispute, according to police records.

Police arrested John Sherman Foster at approximately 10:45 p.m., based on the reports of the victim and a witness to the attack. Dennis Leudesiaire, 30, reportedly entered the Foot Patrol office with head wounds which required emergency medical treatment and told police he had been attacked by Foster, claiming that Foster had struck him with a hammer.

When a deputy contacted Foster, the suspect was allegedly holding a large claw hammer, and had a substance which appeared to be blood on his shirt, but was uninjured. Foster was arrested and charged with assault with a deadly weapon.

The attack reportedly occurred when Leudesiaire confronted Foster, claiming that Foster was in possession of a backpack that had been stolen from Leudesiaire. According to police records, a witness reported that Foster, who was seated in the back of a van on Estero Rd. at the time of the argument, suddenly struck Leudesiaire on the side of the head with a hammer.

Leudesiaire was treated at Goleta Valley Community Hospital, where he received 40 stitches in his ear. He also reportedly suffered a broken ear drum and a major concussion.

What Boltcutters? This Pair Here?

Four students were arrested May 26 after witnesses contacted police and reported that the suspects were attempting to steal bikes from the outdoor racks at Francisco Torres Residence Hall.

Police arrived at the scene at approximately 1:02 a.m. where two members of F.T.'s security staff were detaining Brice Hardt Hendricks, 18, Scott Alan Cohon, 19, and Brian Vaughan Breschini, 18. Hendricks and Breschini attend Hartnell College in Salinas, and Cohon is an Isla Vista resident who attends Santa Barbara City College.

Deputies later arrested a fourth suspect, Kirk Lewis Haney, 18, who witnesses had reported as being involved in the attempted theft. Haney attends Cal State University at Long Beach.

According to police records, a witness noticed the four suspects approaching the bike racks carrying a pair of bolt cutters and a sledgehammer. When the witness observed the suspects moving through the bikes, apparently searching for likely victims, he reportedly shouted at them to stay away from his bike.

When security personnel approached the suspects, one was allegedly attempting to cut a lock with the bolt cutters, while another was reportedly pounding repeatedly on a Kryptonite lock with the sledgehammer.

The lock held. The sledgehammer-swinging suspect's claim that he was not attempting to steal a bike did not. He and the other three were arrested for conspiracy to commit theft and criminal conspiracy. Police also requested that an additional charge of criminal conspiracy be filed.

Breschini allegedly told officers that the suspects had purchased the bolt cutters in Salinas that day, then drove down in a pick up truck to "steal bikes."

From Where?

Police arrested a 19-year-old Lompoc resident after he allegedly repeatedly gave false information to the deputies who contacted him on Del Playa Road May 26.

Deputies reportedly observed David Chu walking in the 6600 block of Del Playa at approximately 10:40 p.m. carrying a can of beer. When they stopped Chu and asked him for identification, he said he didn't have any, but told officers his name was "David Mau" and that he was 20 years old.

He told a deputy that he lived on "Uranus Street" in Buellton, but the officer knew better and was aware that Uranus is not in Buellton. Chu then admitted that he lived in Lompoc, but continued giving false information about his name, age and address. He was eventually arrested and taken to the Foot Patrol office for booking.

Idiots Armed with Eggs And Schaeffer-nomics: I.V.'s Battle of the Bad

By Christopher Scheer
Staff Writer

Like some unholy reunion gone sour, this year's installment of the now-legendary Battle of the Bad Isla Vista Bands descended to new depths of pathetic depravity this Sunday in Anisq'Oyo' Park, thereby succeeding beyond its wildest dreams.

What was once a pleasant cabbage-throwing affair has become — in its third annual incarnation — a travesty, an indefensible waste of unfertilized chick flesh and the pinnacle of I.V. culture.

And while some angry young malcontent with a 12-pack of AA farm-fresh ones managed to knock over a bowling trophy, the contest elections went on with all the integrity of a David Gardner kill-PIRG campaign. Following a grand tradition of calculated anarchy, nobody really won, an irony based on an oxymoron: if you can win an election, you're not truly bad.

As usual, the Battle of the Bad was the best place all year to see historic I.V. figures get slobbering drunk and roll around in the dirt together. And, as usual, the Mystic Sultans of Ben-Wa were the nominal winners. But despite this sense of continuity, something didn't quite feel right. As Battle of the Bad veteran and Umbilical Chordster Jay Hinman put it: "This is my least favorite Battle of the Bad yet."

Why was this so? What was different, why has it all gone sadly awry?

- Jay Hinman wasn't drunk.
- There were too many idiots throwing eggs. They hurt and they leave stains that look much too much like semen. (The only good that came out of the hundreds of hurtled embryos was Mike Lupro's wonderful song about mayonnaise and wasting food in an era of need.)
- I missed the Xion set for the third year in a row.

Other than that it was all pretty grand, in its scrungy way. The requisite mood prevailed, a mood which gives one the impression of an afternoon fading into oblivion rather than the past.

Some highlights then:

- High-heel-wearing, black-scarf-gesturing Gail "Stevie" Pelicano, duetting "Stop Dragging My Heart Around" with be-soaked and be-nighted sex god Scott Derr.
- Kelly Richardson and friends being gratuitously arty, smashing TV sets and otherwise conforming to the role society has pigeonholed them into.
- MC Brown's security posse grimly deflecting rotting vegetables and eggs with their bodies in defense of anti-hero and closet misogynist Marc Brown.
- Little Company of Mary crooner Brett Remy flopping unceremoniously into the mud from an oversize womb, before lighting a smoke and looking grizzled in diapers.

While frantic rumors circle I.V. that this may have been the last Battle of the Bad, you can be sure it will continue in some form or another. Because if it didn't, where else would the Boiling Idiots play?

Besides the educational sanctions placed on the view. Each chapter must also hold a sexism workshop in the fall; and all are directed to encourage their national organizations to enhance pledge education programs with special treatment of the "isms" and serenading.

"I think the decision was perfectly adequate. In order for the system to learn from this, (the sanctions) had to be positive, and they were positive," IPC President Garrett Brief said.

ceremonies, and exceptions were made only for students who showed proof they were unable to switch into other ceremonies for reasons such as nonrefundable plane tickets or unchangeable hotel reservations.

Sociology major Lynette Figueras said the Dean of Students Office could have managed things better. "If they found out much earlier how many people would be involved they would have been able to split up the majors better."

Several students said they sent paperwork to the Dean of Students that the office claims was never received. On top of that, other students said they never received paperwork the Dean of Students Office claims they mailed.

Kara Overaa, a graduating senior, had planned to attend her appropriate Social Sciences II ceremony, but is now scheduled in Social Sciences III.

"They said they didn't receive my paperwork but I did send it.... Now I won't know anyone in my ceremony and my parents have to come earlier," Overaa said.

Figueras also had problems with her paperwork, but was able to stay in her ceremony after she and her parents complained in person and in writing. "We pay something like $50,000 to go to school here. We deserve to go through the ceremony we want," Figueras said.

And yet more students were stifled by the confusing forms required for commencement. Students must fill out up to three separate forms to graduate and/or partake in ceremonies.

Jason Spievak, a senior political science major, began signing forms in early April to attend ceremonies this June. He told the registrar representative that he wasn't officially graduating but that he wanted to walk through ceremonies. He later discovered he had only registered his name in the commencement booklet but was not signed up for ceremonies, Spievak said.

He was going to be moved into Social Sciences III, but after filing a petition and "being extremely persistent," he was allowed to stay in his assigned ceremony.

However, Public Events Director Valerie Halverson believes her office made directions as clear as possible but admits "there is always

RANCH: University Reverses Controversial Plans, Land Will not be Sold

mined" as of yet, Malaspina said, but since UCSB is required to raise its money first, "there is time to identify a funding source," he added.

UCSB is currently conducting a study to determine how much money can be raised toward matching Gardner's promise, and will "kick off a fundraising campaign" after its completion next year, according to Vice Chancellor for Institutional Advancement Edward Birch.

UCSB acquired the land in 1968 when local artist Francis Sedgwick and his wife Alice bequeathed it to the university, under the condition that it not leave university ownership. When the university announced plans to sell the hilly terrain earlier this year, opponents claimed it should be kept as a natural preserve.

UCSB's 75 percent of the ranch will now be divided into two parts: a 3,500 acre natural reserve and a smaller parcel for "general campus use," Birch said. The remaining 25 percent that was given to the Sedgwick heirs will be sold, he added.

The larger reserve will be used for "research and teaching," Birch said, but he was not sure what purpose the smaller parcel will serve. "We just don't know yet," he said.

UC maintenance funding for the natural reserve will be used to build and maintain fences, to keep brush trimmed for fire prevention and to pay guards to stop trespassing and vandalism, Birch said.

Robert Norris, chairman of the UCSB chancellor's advisory committee on natural reserves, is relieved by UCSB's decision to preserve the land. "The property is a beautiful sample of South Coast range environment," he said, and "it is large enough to offer considerable class and research use."

Norris expressed skeptical concern about whether money for land maintenance will continue in the future. "With no money to maintain the land, money might have to come out of other reserve programs," he said, adding he is pleased that "they do have some money to operate on now."

It is unknown which portion of the ranch will make up the heirs' 25 percent, but Norris believes it will most likely be the areas containing the ranch house and other buildings.

If the portion of the land containing the buildings is sold, Norris said the university should construct new buildings on the land. "We will need lab space for researchers to work" and shelters to protect users during inclement weather, he added.

LRDP: Revised Plan Pleases Critics

to the university community and that it failed to address impacts on Isla Vista. Other problems stemmed from proposed building sites, including one site on Storke Campus which failed to acknowledge the existence of the Associated Students Greenhouse on the land. Planners did not become aware of the greenhouse until early December.

Although Chancellor Barbara Uehling originally called the first draft "responsible," the administration has changed several elements in the new revision.

Mathematics professor Ken Millet, the chair of the LRDP steering committee, said the November version had problems, but he believes the new plan alleviates most complaints.

"I'm much more pleased with the current draft," Millet said, adding that the changed plan boasts a "whole range of responses to concerns voiced."

John Buttny, the assistant to Third District County Supervisor Bill Wallace, has monitored the LRDP's impact on Isla Vista. He said that although the first draft was "grossly inadequate," the latest version shows improvement.

Among the positive steps Buttny cited was the addition of a 13-page supplement to the LRDP addressing Isla Vista. "We like the direction" the new report takes, Buttny said.

Less pleased with the revision was UCSB library assistant Peter Shapiro, a staff participant in the Greenhouse project. Though the greenhouse is now acknowledged in the plan, Shapiro was angered by wording that stipulates, "in the long-term, housing has a greater priority for use of this site." Shapiro believes this language indicates an intention to destroy the greenhouse, which has been in operation growing rare plants for many uses since 1976.

"It's totally outrageous," Shapiro said. Though the plan offers the alternative of incorporating the greenhouse into a new housing structure or relocating it, Shapiro doubts an incorporation will take place and believes moving the current structure is "unrealistic" due to its costliness.

Millet said student housing is the plan's number-one priority, given that it seeks to accommodate 35 percent of UCSB students in university-owned housing; currently 22.1 percent live in university housing. He added that he believes both of the proposed alternatives for the greenhouse are feasible.

A.S. Internal Vice President James Siojo, a member of the LRDP steering committee, also voiced a positive reaction. "They've been very thorough, (and) I'm substantially impressed" with the supplement on I.V., Siojo said, adding that he has only begun to read the document in detail.

The administration will hold one hearing to solicit public input into the plan on July 9 in Santa Barbara at the County Board of Supervisors hearing room at 7 p.m. UCSB Assistant Chancellor of Budget and Planning Robert Kuntz said they chose to hold a single hearing downtown for the community's convenience, and because of good facilities and ample parking.

confusion with the ceremonies."

Other changes have been made to alleviate the expected strain on the ceremonies. The Science and Mathematics ceremony will be expanded to include the overflow from Social Sciences I and II and has been renamed Science, Mathematics and Social Sciences III.

It was necessary to move the overflow of students from the two impacted Social Sciences ceremonies into the Science, Mathematics and Social Sciences III ceremony because "we don't want (the ceremonies) to be so large that the people participating can't enjoy it,"

Halverson said.

Some preventive changes the Dean of Students Office will explore are: changing the grouping of majors to allow less impacted majors to be integrated with overcrowded majors, moving the site from the lagoon to another location, and changing the initial advertisement in January to be bigger and bolder, according to Buford.

Redwood Summer: Call to All Students

Shari Menard

If you've been following the newspapers, including the Nexus, you should have come across a few articles relating to a certain incident that occurred on May 24 in Oakland. Two Earth First! members, Judi Bari and Darryl Cherney, were the victims of a bomb that was planted in Judi's car. They were immediately arrested for "transporting explosives," although the police had no evidence of the bomb being theirs. As Dave Karoly and Cindy Headley pointed out in a recent Nexus article (Daily Nexus June 1, "Earth First! Attacked But Not Defeated"), Darryl and Judi would have to be moronic to carry explosives under the front seat of their car, or as the police later changed the allegation, under the back seat. Judi suffered a broken pelvis and Darryl suffered the humiliation of being detained without a cause.

Bari has been threatened in the past. As stated in Alexander Cockburn's column in the Thursday, May 31 Los Angeles Times, Bari spoke at a rally two days before the explosion where she nervously joked about the 45 death threats she had received. Last August, a logging truck (a connection should be made here: the logging companies are precisely who Earth First! is targeting for their clearing of old growth forests) rammed into the back of Judi's car, but the police said there was not enough evidence to prosecute.

Luckily, no one was injured, but the incident was a hint of things to come. First, a "coincidental" car accident. Next, a "coincidental" bombing, with "coincidental" death threats throughout...

The connection that was made above between Earth First!, Bari, and the logging companies should be ample evidence for a prime suspect of the bombing: The logging companies! Bari and Cherney had recently begun to organize a national recruiting effort to bring anyone interested in the fate of the forests together to block the cutting of old-growth Redwoods in Northern California. The timber companies are exploiting the forests, which have taken centuries to reach their majestic heights, merely for the satisfaction of short-term profit. 95 percent of the Redwood Forests have already been cleared, and much of that land is no longer sufficient to refurbish the trees that have been lost. Bari's and Cherney's efforts to stop the logging companies' raping of the earth threatened the profits of these exploitative companies, therefore the loggers tried to exterminate them.

The most recent article on the incident came on June 1, in the Times. It reported that a "letter writer" claimed responsibility for the actions. A person claiming to be "the Lord's avenger" spoke of attempting to punish Bari for allegedly opposing abortion foes and defying trees. Judi was accused of being "possessed of the Devil." The letter writer explained that "The Lord cleared my vision and revealed this unto me outside the Baby-killing Clinic(sic) when Judi Bari smote with Satan's words the humble and Faithful servants of the Lord who had come here to make witness against Abortion." The writer seemed a bit confused. He or she went on to say that he or she was offended again because "this possessed demon Judi Bari spread her Poison to tell the Multitude that trees were not God's gift to Man but that trees were themselves gods and it was a sin to cut them.... I felt the Power of the Lord stir within My heart and I knew I had been Chosen to Strike down this Demon." It seems a bit odd that this so-called "Lord" would have wanted revenge on someone trying to save part of His/Her so-called creation. The writer must not have read the part in the Bible that talks about stewardship....

Judi and Darryl were on their way to Santa Cruz and then to Santa Barbara to deliver their message about clear-cutting of the Redwoods in Northern California. Moreover, they were seeking interested individuals to enhance the group effort to stop the overcutting of forests through peaceful and non-violent protests. Bari and others call for "sustainable yield practices," which allows trees to be cut at the rate that they grow. Anything more is environmentally unsound. Anything less is socially unsound, for this creates lost jobs. Judi and Darryl are concerned not only with the well-being of the trees, but also with the well-being of

Judi was also a prominent organizer for the IWW (International Workers of the World), a group that seeks to ensure the rights of the workers, mainly through unions. On Wednesday, Apr. 11, 1990, a group of Earth Firsters, including Judi and Darryl, denounced the act of tree spiking, a technique intended to deter the cutting of old-growth forest. Previously, EF! had neither condemned nor condoned the act, but a statement made in an IWW publication, The Industrial Worker, was made that was intended to discourage tree spiking. The statement made clear that EF! had as much concern for human rights as they do for environmental protection: "Timber corporations care no more for their employees than they do for the life of the forest. Their routine maiming and killing of mill-workers is coldly calculated into the cost of doing business just as the destruction of whole ecosystems is considered a reasonable by-product of lumber production. These companies would think nothing of sending a spiked tree through a mill, and relish the anti-EF! publicity that an injury would cause." It is senseless, therefore, to deem Judi and Darryl misanthropes.

The Redwood Summer campaign illuminates the issue of non-violent action. Attempts to halt their efforts have included harassment, car slamming and terrorism. However, the planter of the bomb may have done exactly opposite of what he or she intended. More people now know about Redwood Summer than previously, and there will now be more participation than there would have been otherwise.

Earth First! is making a call to all students interested in participating in this momentous environmental action. The opening event will be on June 20, and will be an effort to shut down Louisiana Pacific's log export dock in Somoa, just south of Eureka in Humboldt County. By participating in the non-violent protest, you can show the planters of the bomb that they have failed miserably and show the timber companies that environmental and human injustices will not go unnoticed.

Damn The Commies

Editor, Daily Nexus:

Dear Wayne Cohan (Daily Nexus, "Cubans Know History and Don't Want Return of 'Free Cuba,'" June 1):

Your article was so full of lies and social science jargon that I must enlighten you and others about the atrocious human rights abuses that Fidel Castro has committed against his own people.

First and foremost, Fidel Castro forbids the formation of independent political parties and prohibits any form of freedom to challenge his rule. This policy is based on his sordid logic: "outside the revolution, no rights at all." For 31 years, Cubanos have enjoyed no rights at all other than those that Fidel Castro determines to be within his revolution.

Therefore, when you say "Fidel Castro is not the only leader Cuba has..." There is a national assembly which is truly representative of the Cuban people, you are distorting the truth. Castro may not be the only leader, but he always has the last word. The National Assembly may hold elections, but with one political party to choose from — the Communist Party — why hold elections at all?

Furthermore, when you say that "the neighborhood committees, known as the Committees for the Defense of the Revolution... serve as the electoral colleges," you are wallowing in your ignorance. These committees were established to keep an eye on people; their primary function is to report anyone who engages in anti-Castro activities to the police.

Second, Fidel Castro has violated the human rights of his own people. He ordered the arrest of the members of the Cuban Committee on Human Rights, which was formed secretly to document the human rights abuses in Cuba. Elizardo Sanchez, Adolfo Rivero and Enrique Hernandez were the last members of the committee who were arrested. Their crime: they had informed a Reuter news correspondent in Havana of the arrest of two other members of the committee, Dr. Domingo Jorge Delgado and Jose Luis Alvarado. The reporter was expelled from Cuba and the members of the Cuban Committee on Human Rights are still in jail.

A 17-year-old boy, Antonion Frias Sosa, who had taken photographs for the committee and had a copy of the International Human Rights Declaration in his possession, was also arrested and then mysteriously died in police custody. Aramis Taboada, who went to jail for trying to form a free trade union, also died in a Cuban prison.

Therefore, when you say "the basic needs of the people were deemed to be more important than so-called personal freedoms," again you are not telling the whole truth, for Fidel Castro is the one who has deemed that the basic needs of the people are more important than everything else, and Fidel has already deemed that freedom of speech is not a basic need. If you believe as Fidel does that human beings are animals, that we do not have the moral capacity to reason, then I can see why you might believe that freedom of expression is not a basic need.

Third, and most important, Fidel Castro is a tyrannical dictator who, like every tyrant before him — Adolf Hitler, Joseph Stalin, Mao Tse Tsung — is driven by his greedy desire to stay in power. The primary goal of the Cuban revolution is not to improve the living conditions of the people, it is to keep Fidel Castro and his brother, Raulito, in power. If you are so eager to defend them, I know many Cuban exiles who are willing to buy you a one-way ticket to Havana. I myself am the son of Cuban immigrants. My mother and father lived most of their lives in Cuba and they and many others can assure you and your friends that the one thing Cubanos want the most is a free Cuba. Viva Cuba libre!

Semi-automatic Sensibility

Editor, Daily Nexus:

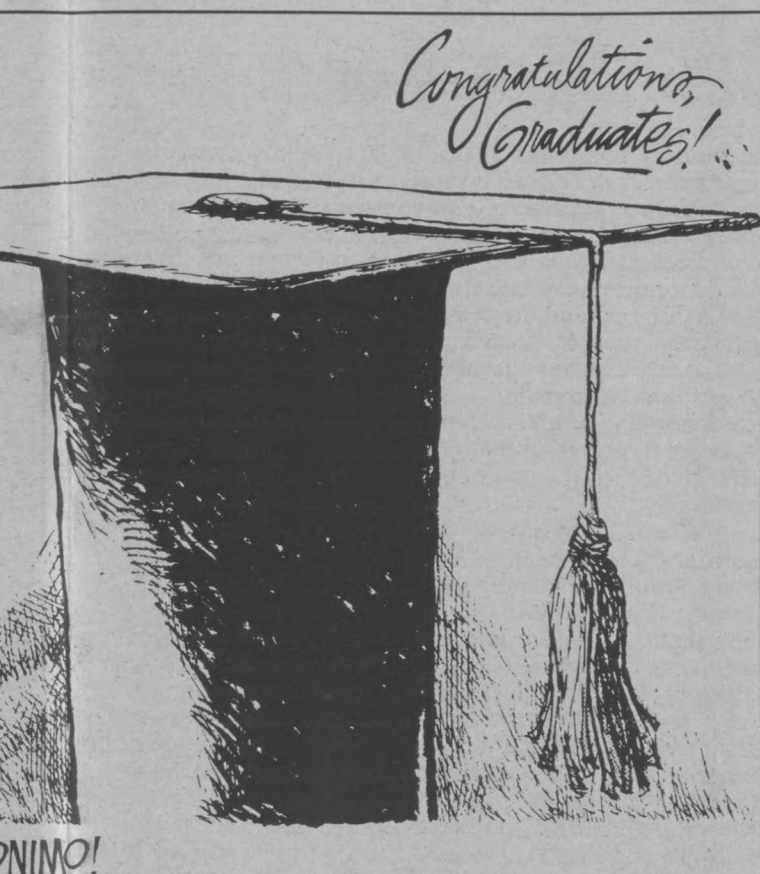

This letter is to correct any delusions promoted by the editorial cartoon (Jun. 1). It showed someone driving in a car shooting people with a rifle and saying, "this is a sport" and then quoting the NRA as saying that "semi-automatic weapons are for sport only." This could not be farther from the truth.

Banning semi-automatic weapons is an ignorant move once some of the facts are intelligently reviewed. Only .5 percent of weapons used in crime are rifles of a military style semi-auto. Also, only a very small percentage of guns used in crime are obtained legally. Most criminals obtain their guns through illegal means. Gun-control laws would have no effect on these criminals and their abilities to obtain weapons. Gun-control laws only harm the honest citizen. I personally own a semi-automatic rifle. I obtained it legally and take good care of it and keep it locked up. I use it for sport (I go shooting at the rifle range and shoot at targets and silhouettes). Why should I be punished?

The second amendment was put in the Constitution to prevent tyranny. Without being armed, we cannot protect ourselves. Hitler, Stalin, and the KKK knew this and made people turn in their arms and then subjected them to tyranny. People complain that criminals have an awesome cachet of weapons. We as citizens should have the reasonable means to protect ourselves. The police cannot be everywhere. Banning guns — any guns — will have results similar to Prohibition. Once the facts are seen, people who are against guns change their minds, as can be seen in The Yale Law Journal (Dec. 1989) where an anti-gunner concedes that prohibition is not the answer. The NRA is not a bunch of crazies, it is just a group that helps to protect our constitutional rights, like the ACLU. An armed man is a free one.

Escaping Virtually All Forms Of Reality

Benjamin Curtis

Dear Michelle Sanfilippo,

I read your article in last Thursday's Nexus (May 17 Daily Nexus "Virtual Reality: It Cheats us out of our ability to love life") and was astounded at our similar thoughts! I too am computer illiterate—I mean, who really needs to know all that new jargon about menus and booting and computer shit like that, right? Sounds to me like the rest of the world is going crazy over a new toy that really doesn't do much more than my ol' manual typewriter.

I couldn't have put it better than when you admonished us all to "question technology," but I think we must be more assertive than just questioning when it comes to computers. What this country needs is a purging of technology, sorta like the Kristallnacht in Germany 50 years ago. But, of course, instead of evil Nazis shattering the windows of Jews because of their ignorant prejudice, we'd break every damn computer screen we see and spill their silicon guts on the streets, because we are enlightened as to the inherent evils they impose on society.

And your points about the uselessness of the "Virtual Reality" technology were right on the mark—but I gather from your descriptions that you hadn't read the propaganda printed by our own beloved Daily Nexus, otherwise you would not even have gone to the demonstration before writing your beautiful article. The article proclaiming virtual reality's virtues gave many "uses" for the technology, but even in the distant future, the suggested uses of this toy touted by its developer fell in the realm of uselessness. I mean, this fool imagines VR assisting a surgeon conducting micro-surgery—gimme a break! The surgeon dons a video game mask and a magic glove and remotely controls a micro-robot through your blood vessels, fixing stuff along the way, while he's in the next room? Right! What happens to all the surgeon/patient bonding that's supposed to go on while the patient is injected with near-lethal doses of anesthetic? The patient won't even be in the hospital for more than a couple of hours—the floral business is sure to take a beating! And what happens if the patient dies? Does the "remote microsurgeon" get to hear some depressing music, see a bright light and the message "Game Over — please insert a token for another life"? Any surgery that doesn't have scalpels and lots of spilt blood squirting on the doctor's face like those really great scenes in *M*A*S*H* just isn't surgery in my book. It's obvious that virtual reality's benefits to medicine are nil.

And the creator of this "absolutely mind-boggling machine" talked about the spinoff technology of "remote operations," like it was a great thing itself. Wrongo, buster. Look, Mr. Virtual-Intelligence, why would the American taxpayer be willing to pay millions of dollars a day to keep astronauts in space when some technician wearing one of your toys could do all the work from the ground, at only hundreds a day? Why would the president of the United States allot billions to the space program that could be spent on farmers, the homeless or the mentally ill? The answer, dimwit, is that they want to spend all that money just to keep Americans up there so the Russkies don't hold our skies hostage. And speaking of Russkies, you say fire fighters could remotely pilot a robot to put out fires in places people couldn't go. Like Chernobyl? You know, I think all those soviet fire-fighting comrades deserved to die for putting out that radioactive fire that would have contaminated the planet. It was their reactor that blew up anyway, right? Remote fire-fighting is a bogus idea; American reactors don't catch fire anyway, so I say let the Russkies burn in their own radiation clouds.

"The imagination relies on the use of our senses ... (which) cannot be improved." Michelle, that statement is so perfectly true. Did you read it somewhere, or make it up yourself? That one statement epitomizes a recurrent thought of mine—in fact, just the other day I was looking at the rings of Saturn through my telescope, letting my imagination run free about what it might be like to be there, when I remarked, "There's just no way to improve on our eyes, you know? I mean, look how clear the image is tonight." I can still remember my imagination reeling with the sight of cloud layers on something billions of miles away, until my brother tweaked the telescope's knobs and I lost the image.

And I mean, look, I know a lot of bio majors who look at films and computer-enhanced photos, but whenever they can, they check out what those things really look like under a microscope, and their minds just take this new perspective; mix in a little imagination and they understand what's happening. Nothing quite compares to using one's own eyes, and I don't think there's a single machine or tool we could use that would improve on our own God-given senses.

And that theory of yours — about the relationship between people wasting time escaping reality rather than spending time dealing with it—outstanding! I've got to give that theory two thumbs up! If people use virtual reality to escape from the world they live in, they won't mind so much about the problems that are surrounding them in real life. The answer to society's problems is obvious: stop development on virtual reality systems. Perfect! Right on the mark, Michelle!

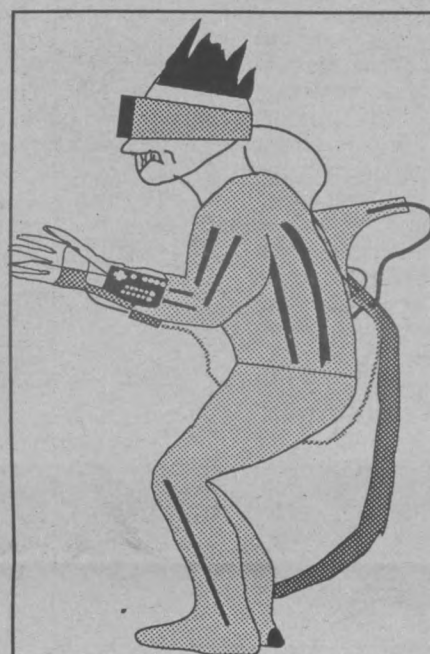

But, of course, since virtual reality isn't on the market yet, not too many people could be escaping into it, right? Hmmmm ... do you suppose they're all escaping into an alternate reality through the use of some other evil technology?

Wait! I've got it! They're using television! We've gotta ban TVs — and, of course, VCRs and video cameras. Better make that all kinds of cameras — wouldn't want normally productive people to escape into the memories of their last vacation. Wait — ban vacations! And movies have got to go — no, make that all theater. All those actors and dancers are in a world all their own anyway, so we better not foster that! Ever seen those joggers with Walkmans on? Totally oblivious to the real world. Ban 'em. In fact, ban all music of any kind. Can you think of any other ways people might escape from reality, Michelle? Wait! Destroy all printing presses; we can't have working people wasting time in the alternate realities of a "good" book, right? That just about covers any reality escape people might have, doesn't it, Michelle? Well, except for imagination. But don't worry, since these people wouldn't be allowed to communicate what they imagine. I'm sure they'd soon give up on that as well. Then no one would escape, and they'd finally deal with the problems our society has in reality!

WE can do this, Michelle! Just you and me, babe, and the other members of the Anti-Computer-Enhanced Escapist Revolutionary Front. ACE ERF! Cool — everyone will be happy and work for the good of everyone in need! We'll turn this world into a productive society without social ills! Power, Sister!

Just A Number And A Form

Editor, Daily Nexus:

After four years and countless dollars spent on this university, the time had come to prepare for graduation. Reservations were made, family were invited, transportation was arranged, and announcements were sent out. Everything was as it should have been. I had returned the form I received in the mail, securing my place in the commencement list posted outside Cheadle Hall. I went to the Dean of Students' office and was assisted by a secretary who told me that, since they either did not receive or could not now find my forms, I would not be allowed to graduate in my major or with my friends, despite the fact that extensive preparations that centered around a certain commencement time had been made.

Out of frustration and an inability to work things out at the dean's office (or even see the dean!), I went to the chancellor. She declined to discuss the matter with me, and I was told by her assistant that she did not want to get involved in the matter. As the dean still refused to see me, it became increasingly clear that the administration had little interest in resolving this matter in anything other than the absolutely quickest manner, regardless of the effect on my family and me. Out of frustration and not knowing where else to turn for help, I finally explained the situation to my parents, explaining that many plans (including travel arrangements from Oregon) would have to be changed. Then, after a week of my own efforts in person, one long-distance phone call from my parents and all of a sudden there's an opening!

I know of at least two other people who, although they followed directions and submitted proper forms, were initially left out of their respective graduating classes and had to go to the trouble of petitioning the dean in writing to be reinstated. There appears to be an abundance of misinformation and miscommunication flowing from both Cheadle Hall and the Dean of Students' office, and, as a usual consequence, students are being made to feel the brunt of it.

There's a sign that hangs on the wall of the dean's office which reads: "Poor planning on your part does not constitute an emergency on my part." I suggest both the chancellor and the dean take a moment to consider the greater implications of what to them are casual, everyday decisions. Although it is a tired expression at this point, Ms. Uehling and Ms. Lawson, may I remind you that you are here for us, not the other way around.

The American Way: Fake Love, Fast Cars, Free-Loaders

Ivan M. Toft

The object of education in this country is education — or at least, it should be. Yet as many as 40 percent (source: L.A. Times, 24 May 90) of the seniors graduating this year will not, in fact, be celebrating an educational accomplishment when they walk across the stage at commencement. What they will be celebrating is a punched ticket: a credential, and not an education. Why is this?

The answer is that these "students" cheated their way through school. Admittedly, however, cheating has become something of the "American way." Many of these chronic frauds cheated through high school, cheated on their SATs, and are cheating now in college. These people will not, as many of them believe, get suddenly "cured" after graduation, because life is a process and not a series of connected events or goals (one is never "done" in any real sense until one dies). On the contrary, these frauds-in-educated-clothing will cheat on LSATs, MCATs, GREs, and anything else required to sweat their dishonest way up the next rung on their ladder to "success." They will cheat on their taxes, cheat on their husbands and wives, and in the end they will lie in a hospital room, feeling somehow cheated of life.

I will not here repeat the tired bleatings of our school teachers, who once promised us that "cheaters never prosper." These same well-meaning people also assured us that "crime doesn't pay." Cheaters and criminals do prosper. And yet, for all the anger I feel toward these people, I must admit that they are in large part the necessary product of a culture that has always tended to view a post-secondary education as simply a means to an end, and not an end in itself. Combine this with a "have it all" mentality, and a modern tendency to exchange the quality of our moments for the quantity of them, and you begin to wonder why everyone doesn't cheat just to stay in school, much less to get good grades. How is the modern student expected to "keep all the balls in the air," juggling a necessary social life with a necessary academic life and, for many, a necessary part-time job? For that matter, how is the modern college graduate expected to be a great spouse/lover, great father or mother, great employee, and great community activist all at once? This is the malady of our age.

I suppose, then, that the elimination of academic fraud in all its various manifestations is only a pipe dream. In America, only monks (who sacrifice social life for academic accomplishment) or geniuses (who need sacrifice nothing to make good grades) can be expected to get an education. Besides, academic fraud has taken on the trappings of an accepted institution: many fraternities and sororities are actually organized on the principle of fraud. They maintain well-organized test and term-paper files and presumably aid their members in resume construction; they show members where and how to "apply" for as many "honors" and "honor societies" as possible, and organizing events to "benefit their communities." Not all greek organizations are like this, and many individual greeks are outstanding members of their social and academic communities. Even so, however, this does not counter my assertion that many fraternities serve to encourage the means-to-an-end mentality associated with cheating.

BRETT Daily Nexus

"What a waste it is to lose one's mind, or not to have a mind. How true that is."

And fraud is not entirely the fault of students either. Faculty and administration also bear some of the responsibility. Professors who use the same versions of their tests — year after tired year — actually encourage the perception that fraud (much less teaching, a fact in the case of research-oriented scholars) is of no concern to them. Many professors do not bother to attend major examinations, and do not ensure that these examinations are properly proctored: typically a graduate student will sit reading a book during the test. After all, isn't it silly to treat adults as if they were children by pacing back and forth through the room? At UCSB, the administration did no service to Letters & Sciences students when it ceased providing blue books for essay examinations. Those few professors who are concerned with academic fraud have been forced into awkward and second-best solutions such as booklet swapping and stamping.

Finally, I should perhaps admit that my definition of "education" may be too narrow and too demanding. After all, learning how to swill large quantities of cheap fizzy beer, fake love or sincerity in a relationship, brown-nose or badger a professor for undeserved grade revisions, and neatly tuck a car cover around a shiny new "Beemer," still represent a kind of learning, right?

The Reader's Voice

Stereotypical Stigmas

Dear Editor,

For the past few months, my girlfriend has been visiting the UCSB Counseling and Career Center regularly. Like the average couple, we now and then find it hard to adjust to what we experience to be a formidable and busy life. This has motivated my good friend to seek out a fair and impartial listener, other than our friends and our parents, to hear advice and voice various concerns about the relationship.

When each session is through, we always sit together and talk about what was said and accomplished during the meeting. While conversing in our special talk recently, I discovered that the latest discussion topic concerned her endeavor to effectively communicate her feelings to me, and the intimidation she would feel as a result.

I asked my friend what she thought about that, and she offered that it might just be "the whole problem," and though a slight one, one she did not want to get worse. This was not that easy to hear, but hell, I was so intent on grabbing this "problem" by the throat, I asked her to go on and to please tell me how she came to this conclusion. She replied that her counselor explained (to her) that because of my ethnic background (I am of Mexican heritage), there is a tendency to be domineering and intense towards things — especially a relationship. We stopped right there.

I cannot express how surprised I was to hear this; and the fact that it came from the mouth of a university employee of the counseling center, no less. Was I hearing things? No; she swore he said that. I was dumbstruck! To believe that because I am of Mexican roots I expect my friend to succumb to my every whim and walk under me as if a woman's only function is providing a man with a hearty meal each day and partner to copulate with each night is not only a racist remark, but shows how really ignorant some people can be, and the (unfortunate) tendency for people of one arrogant and chauvinistic race or culture to spew forth ugly, illogical and bigoted remarks about a culture different from theirs. The counselor's unethical and injurious statement did not influence my friend in any way, as she denied his ludicrous and laughable theory (she has no Ph.D. or degree, just a warm heart).

My real concern, now that I am over the shock, pertains to the future of UCSB's dogmatists and the thousands like them who choose to remain secure in their zealous bigotry. I am about to graduate from UCSB this summer, and though I will be leaving the immediate area, I also will be entering a larger span (of the "real world") where people hold these unfavorable opinions about ethnic groups and their cultures without fair, compassionate and complete examination of the facts. I, for one, do not believe psychology (or sociology) to be a science, but that does not make it understandable and acceptable for them to teach, especially in our day, that Mexican men generally are the "superior patriarch" in a relationship and deserve respect, obedience, and loyalty without earning it or reciprocating it. It's preposterous!

Racism exists on this campus! You now all (I hope) see how it can be found in the deepest, darkest corners of this institution of learning. I am writing this very personal letter to prove to all other victims — my brothers and sisters — that I finally understand....

To the foolish racists who abide in those dark corners, I have nothing to say except that I believe your minds are like the pupil in the eye; the more light myself or anyone else can pour on it, the more it will contract.

The Fenced-In Elite

Editor, Daily Nexus:

The College of Engineering lacks diversity. Faculty and students in the College of Engineering, in general, seem to live their lives on the outskirts of social awareness.

I have been a student in the computer science department for three years. I once thrived on the competitive, narrow-mindedness of my classes, and I felt proud as a part of this fenced-in elite. Now that I am only three weeks away from graduation, I feel my education had the potential to be much more "educational." The department has ignored the opportunity to associate the standard material with creative, and relevant, topics; and now it is my job to go back and fill in the gaps. This is not a demand for stronger General Education requirements, it has to do with the art of teaching. The university must recognize the responsibility in delivering such technological experts into the world.

(The area of General Education might not be a bad place to consider, however. Bachelors of science students do not have strong requirements in the humanities.)

There has been absolutely nothing "disruptive" or challenging to the atmosphere over at Engineering I. So many nights I have spent on campus, finishing a project, without ever hearing someone question: Why are the only African-Americans I found in Engineering at night cleaning? There is a certain need for diversity among faculty and students: There are no African-American faculty, office personnel, or students (in the dept.) of which I have ever been aware. This is really a peculiarity since the department is well balanced otherwise.

What the college needs to do to break out of its "stereotypical" rut is act in the interest of people who aren't restricted to those stereotypical ways. If the program was of interest to more people, it would be of more interest, and more educational, to those already there.

I am frustrated that the diversity of ideas which are debated on campus, in the Nexus, or elsewhere, never penetrate the consciousness of the C.S. department. My message to the students of my department is to come alive. Exercise your rights and your intelligence. Technology must integrate with the humanities and define its own form of philanthropy.

The computer science department at UCSB holds prestige, there is a strong program here, and students who graduate are acknowledged for their "well rounded" education. However, the times they are a'changin'! We must diversify our faculty, our incoming students, and our range of relevant topics within the college itself. Shatter the stereotype and invent one in which anyone can be a part.

Baskets Please, Not Styrofoam

Editor, Daily Nexus:

Did you see The Deli's little green sandwich baskets come and go before your eyes?

Yes, it's true. During Spring Quarter, The Deli tried to use an alternative plate for the hundreds of sandwiches made each day. The green plastic baskets enabled them to conserve paper and reduce their use of styrofoam. To their surprise, instead of finding the baskets put on top of the garbage containers after use, they found them in the garbage bags!!! Within a couple of weeks The Deli went from having 2,000 plastic baskets to 50. Now there are none. Where did they all go??? Some were spotted on the buses while others were far from home out by the Buchanan Pit Stop. Needless to say, they never found their way back home to The Deli. With more and more green baskets disappearing every day, The Deli had to discontinue their use for expense reasons.

At sometime in the future, the green baskets may be tried once again as a source for the reduction of paper and styrofoam products, but The Deli needs everyone's help to keep the baskets in The Deli if the project is going to succeed. If you have any suggestions or comments relating to the green sandwich baskets, please let them know.

As environmentalists, they realize that it takes everyone's efforts to save the resources and the environment. Please help The Deli conserve resources by cooperating in their plans to do their part as a dining service in conservation.

Weather or not?

Here in Ed's domain we've moved on to a new era of diminutive rule, The Weather Priestess relinquishes the reigns to the Mighty Midget. With no other rains in the forecast we look forward to a TrailBlazing summer, whether you're in Humboldt county or that great kingdom of basketball gods directly north of this state. Locally, since the proposed "summer scam" won't be happening look for Babs to be cruising Del Playa on a debauch Saturday night during a long, hot summer in that brothel known as IV. It looks to be parcher than a low flow toilet filled with dry heaves. All hail the new Kampus Kings and remember: Love reigns supreme.
