After hearing about the "Isla Vista Nude Day" hosted by the Compact Disc and Tape Store on Par-dall Road, syndicated news show "Inside Edition" bought a copy of the owner's videotape and aired it on national television. The story received coverage from news agencies across the country.

'Nude Day' Makes National News

By Denis Faye
Staff Writer

When 300 music fans shed their clothes last Wednesday at the Isla Vista Compact Disc and Tape Store, they knew their courage would earn them a free CD. They didn't know it would earn them national television exposure.

But that's just what happened when a videotape of the event was sold to a nationally syndicated news show, which joined a herd of other media — including the Santa Barbara News-Press, local TV stations and The Associated Press — in blowing the day's events into transcontinental proportions.

The day before the event, the store received "30 to 40 calls" from people wanting to verify the event, organizers said. The actual "Nude Day" was more of a nude morning, with the promotion ending at noon, after the store had given away over $3,000 worth of compact discs.

The store's owner, John Reese, claims that he was not expecting such an enthusiastic turnout. "I wish it hadn't been such a big deal. I don't know if I'm happy with the Nexus for printing it on the front page," he said, referring to a small story the day before the event.

Coverage after the event was more extensive. The News-Press and local ABC affiliate KEYT picked up the event, and KEYT, in turn, notified The Associated Press. "Inside Edition" was among the news programs following the story from the AP wire.

The "Inside Edition" story, which aired locally on Tuesday at 7 p.m. likened the Nude Day to other events that have distinguished Isla Vista over the years, including the 1970 burning of the I.V. Bank of America.

The show had obtained in-store footage from the event, which they subtitled a "home video," but was actually made by Reese. "Inside Edition" paid a "minimal amount" for the footage, Reese said.

When questioned about the legality of airing a videotape displaying people in compromising positions on national television without consent, "Inside Edition" Producer Philip Reeder wasn't worried.

"We have a battery of lawyers that look at every single frame we air," he said. "It's a matter of

Reps Allege $2,400 for FACES Wages Misused

Course Evaluation Still Far from Completion

By Sal Pizarro
Staff Writer

Alleging severe mismanagement of student funds, two Associated Students Legislative Council members have initiated an investigation into how nearly $2,400 was spent on wages last year for the A.S. Faculty and Course Evaluation Survey.

Representatives David Anet and Bob Salk began looking into FACES after learning that editors had spent $2,395 in student wages since January, although the publication failed to come out this quarter as scheduled.

Anet and Salk told Leg Council Wednesday night that they believe students were overpaid for their work on the survey.

Leg Council allocated $6,000 to the survey last spring, but the failure to publish has effectively rendered it useless to students registering for Winter Quarter classes. Anet and Salk estimated that a total of $4,000, including the student wages, has been spent on the survey so far.

The last FACES publication, which came out Fall Quarter 1990, took one year to put together. Work on the current survey has spanned more than a year, and the publishing date has been pushed back to Spring Quarter.

"FACES did not come out this year at all, but we estimate that some $4,000 went towards this thing that did not come out," Salk told Leg Council.

"Our biggest question was,

Huttenback's Conviction Is Upheld in Court of Appeals

A Ventura appellate court upheld a 1988 embezzlement conviction against former UCSB Chancellor Robert Huttenback Wednesday, while his wife's conviction was overturned.

In a decision that drew to a close nearly four years of delays and argument, the 2nd District Court of Appeals said it found no cause to reverse Huttenback's conviction for embezzling $250,000 in university monies to remodel and maintain his Mission Canyon home.

Poet Provides a Chronicle of Her Heritage

Wendy Rose's passion has been exploring through poetry both the beauty and pain of her Native American ancestry. But she believes her work offers insight to all people who have been pushed to the margins of society.

In honor of American Indian Heritage month, the Pulitzer Prize nominee will read from her latest volume of poetry, The Halfbreed Chronicles and Other Poems, in a free public reading today at noon in the UCen Pavilion.

Her work concerns itself ultimately with her heritage as a Hopi and Miwok Indian, and the feelings of isolation, oppression and victimization that often plague marginalized individuals.

"I'm trying to be of some use to my community," Rose said.

But to reach a wider audience, many of Rose's seven books deal with issues of isolation and betrayal outside of her own culture. The Halfbreed Chroni- cles, for example, includes a story of a child genetically damaged in Hiroshima.

But Rose also wants to reach people through lucid language.

"The other important thing is to try and show you can use beautiful language and images and things of that sort without being obscure, and that you really don't have to go to school to appreciate poetry," Rose said.

UCSB American Indian leaders said Rose will fill a gap on campus. "Because we don't have any Indian studies programs, and practically no Indian faculty to support those students, we are really all that those students have to identify with culturally," said Linda Billey-Sevedge, Educational Opportunity Program coordinator of the American Indian Component.

Native American poet Wendy Rose, a Pulitzer Prize nominee, will give a public reading of selections from her book The Halfbreed Chronicles and Other Poems today as part of American Indian Heritage Month.

Bush Approves of Modified Civil Rights Bill

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Bush signed a civil-rights bill Thursday that he said would "fight the evil of discrimination," and tried to silence a new furor over race by withdrawing a tentative order to end government hiring preferences for Blacks and women.

"For the past few years the issue of civil-rights legislation has divided America," Bush said. "No more."

The political divisions that sustained a two-year congressional fight over the civil-rights bill, and prompted Bush to veto a similar measure last year, remained sharp.

The new law negates Supreme Court decisions that made it more difficult for minorities to win lawsuits charging job discrimination by employers. It also expands the rights of women and religious minorities to sue and collect damages for job discrimination, including sexual harassment.

It was Bush's agreement to support a modified version of the bill, and drop his potent political argument that it would prompt employers to resort to racial quotas, that brought overwhelming congressional passage.

Bush signed the Civil Rights Act of 1991 in a Rose Garden ceremony that was overshadowed by the storm of controversy over a proposed presidential Affirmative-Action order circulated Wednesday evening to government agencies. Most Democrats stayed away from the signing in protest.

The order would have ended preferential hiring and promotions for women and minorities, and dropped federal guidelines for hiring practices that the courts apply to private businesses.

White House spokesmen said Bush had never seen the document. They said it was written by his legal counsel, C. Boyden Gray and circulated without Bush's approval.

After the signing, the White House released a new statement in Bush's name replacing the earlier one and deleting the termination orders for Affirmative-Action programs.

But presidential press secretary Marlin Fitzwater refused to rule out the possibility that Bush would later order such changes.

"We support preferences and set-asides as long as they're consistent with the law," Fitzwater said.

A senior administration official, speaking on condition of anonymity, said there is strong support among Bush's advisers for proceeding with the dismantling of some Affirmative-Action programs.

That official predicted more activity in that area and said Bush decided to remove the language proposed by Gray because "he thought this was not the right time."

"I support Affirmative Action," Bush said in signing the new civil-rights law. "Nothing in this bill overturns the government's Affirmative Action program."

Dunk Tank for Smokeout

The American Cancer Society brought the Great American Smokeout to campus Thursday to encourage smokers to kick their habit, and to educate the general public on the ills of nicotine.

"One reason we're out here doing this is that the Great-American Smokeout is a fun event even though dying of lung cancer is grim," said Health Educator Robert Schreiber, who helped bring the event together.

The UCSB campus had an added feature to make the day complete — a dunk tank, where several campus "celebrities" took a voluntary bath for the cause.

"The biggest expense was the dunk tank and the money came from Proposition 99," Schreiber said.

One smoker did not seem fazed by the event, as she sat taking away at a table next to the Quitters' Aid Station. "I would be a crazy person by the end of the day (if I didn't smoke a cigarette)," said Ellen Whitaker, a music theory graduate student.

UCSB Gets $100,000 Gift

UCSB received the largest unrestricted gift in its history in the form of the $100,000 Margaret C. Mosher Challenge. Mosher is a Santa Barbara philanthropist and business executive, as well as a trustee of the UCSB Foundation.

All new and increased gifts to the university from alumni, parents and friends through the foundation and the Chancellor's Council between now and June 3, 1992, will qualify toward the challenge fund.

According to Mosher, unrestricted gifts are important to the university because, "If the university has sufficient discretionary income, it will have the flexibility to take advantage of unpredictable, but important opportunities."

Here Comes the Judge...

A senior U.S. Circuit Court judge will discuss his experiences as a judge during a lecture in Girvetz Theatre today at 3 p.m.

Former Chief Judge of the U.S. Court of Appeals for the Third Circuit Hon. Ruggero J. Aldisert has served as a judge for over three decades through some of the monumental legal controversies of the modern era. He will bring his unique perspective to UCSB during the Arts and Lectures presentation, "Courts, Politics and Public Policy: The 'Rights' Stuff."

The lecture is co-sponsored by the political science department and the Harry Girvetz Memorial Lecture Committee.

New Housing Continuum

The Santa Barbara Mental Health Advisory Board will hold its monthly meeting today at the new Santa Maria Mental Health Services facility.

The focus of the meeting will be on a presentation by Telecare Corporation, which is in the process of developing a mental health treatment facility and housing continuum.

G-7 to Defer Billions From U.S.S.R. Debt

MOSCOW (AP) — The world's richest democracies agreed today to defer $3.6 billion in Soviet debt payments to help restore the crumbling Soviet economy.

The democracies also offered a $1 billion loan to eight Soviet republics, but said this depended on some Soviet gold holdings being used as security for the loan.

Ivan Silayev, the central government's top economist, had said that the Group of Seven countries had dropped a demand that half of the Soviet gold reserves be put up as collateral.

U.S. representative David Mulford said the $1 billion loan offer was in fact contingent on a gold-swap deal. Under it, the republics would sell gold with an option to buy it back later at a fixed price, he said.

"Their feeling was that they would like that option," Mulford said of the republic leaders.

The package is designed to help the disintegrating country survive the winter and begin the difficult transition to a market economy. The agreement illustrates the degree to which the power in the Soviet Union has now all but passed from the Kremlin to the republics.

The G-7 industrial countries demanded Wednesday that the Soviets put up 104 metric tons, or about $1 billion worth at current world prices, of gold as collateral for the debt relief package.

The group — the United States, Japan, Germany, France, Britain, Italy and Canada — is trying to help the Soviet Union stay on its feet financially and eventually pay back its foreign debt, which one Soviet bank official estimated this week at more than $100 billion.

The G-7 agreed to defer $3.6 billion in principal payments on the Soviet Union's medium and long-term foreign debt until 1993.

U.S. Troops Continue Duty in South Korea

SEOUL, South Korea (AP) — The United States will delay withdrawals of U.S. troops from South Korea to pressure North Korea to stop making nuclear weapons, Secretary of Defense Dick Cheney announced Thursday.

The announcement underscored growing U.S. concern about Communist North Korea's nuclear capability and its refusal to allow inspection of its nuclear and reprocessing facilities.

North Korea denies any nuclear weapons program, but South Korean officials say the secretive nation could manufacture weapons-grade nuclear bombs in two or three years, U.S. officials say it could be sooner.

Speaking at the end of two days of security talks with South Korean officials, Cheney said that troop cutbacks will be postponed "until the dangers and uncertainties of the North Korean nuclear program have been thoroughly addressed."

'Older' College Students Are Getting Most Out of Tuition

WASHINGTON (AP) — College students are older than ever before — one in four is 30 or more, a government survey said Thursday. Many of the students are women updating their job skills.

These older students, educators say, are practical. They demand full value for their tuition dollar and they're tough competitors for top grades.

"Older students often fret about going back to the classroom and competing with bright-eyed younger people, but I think for the most part, they manage well," said Susan Kaufmann, from the University of Michigan in Ann Arbor.

Senate Ends Disputes Over New Crime Bill

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Senate broke a stalemate today blocking action on a comprehensive crime bill that would extend the death penalty to more than 50 crimes and require a waiting period for buying a handgun.

After 3 1/2 weeks of inaction, Republicans lifted procedural roadblocks aimed at stopping the proposed new gun controls. The Republicans had also sought to preserve provisions giving police more power to use evidence they seize and bringing to a halt endless appeals by death-row inmates.

With time quickly running out before Congress adjourns for the year, Democrats had challenged President Bush to pressure members of his own party to drop their objections to further action.

Thursday's action cleared the way for key House and Senate negotiators to attempt to iron out differences between two versions of the bill passed earlier by each chamber.

"The fact that we're starting on Thursday afternoon instead of three weeks ago increases the difficulty," said Sen. Joseph Biden (D-Del.), chairman of the Senate Judiciary Committee. "I don't want anybody to be under any illusions."

"But I'm a congenital optimist," Biden added. "I think we can get it done."

Senate Republicans had objected to the appointment of conferees to negotiate a final crime package out of fears that liberal Democrats would gut the bill of the tough measures.

In addition, Sen. Steve Symms (R-Idaho) was blocking further action because the bill would impose a five-day waiting period on buying handguns.

The Senate bill also included a ban on certain weapons. But it was not expected to survive in the final package after the House defeated a similar measure by more than 60 votes.

Intercollegiate Use of RecCen to Come up for Vote Today

By Joanna Frazier
Staff Writer

The Recreation Center Governance Board will decide today whether to defy the chancellor by continuing to call for the banning of intercollegiate athletics from the facility, or to agree to a compromise proposal.

The board will reconsider a proposal that would establish bylaws to their charter, and replace an amendment meant to exclude IC athletics from the student-funded facility. The new proposal, called Section K, was defeated by a single dissenting vote at the board's last meeting.

While board members earlier this year sought to guarantee through an amendment to the charter — also signified "K" — that no IC athletic teams could use the facility, Chancellor Barbara Uehling would not approve the amendment, and Section K was created to replace it.

Board member Dylan Davis shot down the section last week with his single "nay" vote.

"I'm not happy with the chancellor's decision on the first K," he said. "I would like to resubmit it to her. I represent the students as a whole group of people who still want to use the RecCen as a recreational facility."

However, Uehling made it clear she would not allow the exclusion of any group of students from the complex. "I will not sign or approve of anything that excludes a student group from using the facility," she said.

Board member Scott Thomas, who has in the past vocalized his disapproval of the Chancellor's priorities with the project, said he agrees with the Chancellor and Section K now because it is a compromise between banning IC athletics and opening the facility up for recreation.

"I was the most vocal one against intercollegiate athletics moving in last year, but I think Section K is fair, and it is a good compromise," he said.

Michael Young, vice chancellor for student affairs, echoed Thomas' feelings that the new Section K represents a common point. "This moves everyone closer to the same point. We're talking about treating groups in reasonable ways," he said.

Board member Doris Phinney said Section K is crucial to the success of the board. "Section K will give the board the authority to set up bylaws and to maintain control of the facility," she said. "We are in agreement on the goals of the board, but everyone has different ways of ... getting what they want."

She added that the vote must take place when all nine members are present, because seven of the nine must vote in favor for the section to pass.

The board also discussed a draft of their charter at their last meeting which would place IC athletics at the bottom of a priority list, and grant them access to the facility on a fee-schedule basis.

Construction on the project is set to begin next summer.

Reeder went on to add that the legality also depended on a person's definition of "compromising position," noting that "to be naked is not to be naughty."

But local law enforcement didn't agree. Lieutenant Ken Shemwell of the Isla Vista Foot Patrol said that the District Attorney's office went on record as stating "cases of this nature will be prosecuted."

Shemwell went on to explain why the promotion wasn't broken up. "The day of the event, the Foot Patrol didn't receive any complaints. However, the day after the event, there was public outcry to the Foot Patrol, the Santa Barbara Sheriff's Office and the DA," he said.

Reese does not plan to try for a second annual Nude Day. In the aftermath of his promotion, he has become tired of the media circus surrounding his store.

"I wish things would just go back to normal," he said. "I wish everyone would take in the spirit of fun and not as some sick, media-grabbing event."

Future Candidates' Spending Cap: $600

By Sal Pizarro
Staff Writer

Future candidates on the ballot for Associated Students elections will be limited to a maximum of $600 in campaign expenses, after A.S. Legislative Council voted to enact a spending cap at their weekly meeting Wednesday.

The bill, authored by On-Campus Representative Ken Scalir, puts a $400 cap on the amount students can each spend on their campaigns in the general election, and a $200 total for the runoff election. Donations are included in the limitation.

While the spending limit is designed to put an end to exorbitant expenditures by some candidates — A.S. President Rachel Doherty spent approximately $2,000 in her campaign last spring — the rule is far from fool-proof. Write-in candidates will not be bound to the limit, and reports of expenditures will be difficult to verify.

Nonetheless, A.S. officials were hopeful the limit would discourage high cam-

“It's alright for candidates to advertise, but pretty soon it just becomes a lot of paper with names on it instead of issues.”

on-campus representative

paign spending on literature and posters.

“It will make it affordable for students to run, and will make it accessible for all students to run,” Doherty said during a discussion at last week's meeting.

Criticizing the profusion of campaign banners and posters during the spring election, Scalir said, “It's alright for candidates to advertise, but pretty soon it just becomes a lot of paper with names on it instead of issues.”

In other business, Chancellor Barbara Uehling addressed the council, and predicted that a student fee increase for the coming year may be inevitable, but she also expressed hope that the University would seek funds elsewhere first.

The other feasible solution to alleviate the crunch would be shrinking the eligibility pool for California students seeking admission to the University, Uehling said.

“We don't want to give up on the Master Plan (of Higher Education), but if the funds aren't available to do it, we may have to face some tough decisions,” Uehling said.

The Master Plan of Higher Education stipulates that the University of California system must accept the top 12.5 percent of graduating seniors.

Uehling had her worries about the plan however, noting that the question of whom to exclude would be problematic.

“Who's going to be left out?” Uehling asked. “If you look at graduating high school seniors, it might well be that there will be reduced opportunities for certain ethnic groups, and we don't want that to happen.”

A.S. Representative-at-Large Aaron Jones pointed out to the chancellor that while the crisis may be difficult from an administrative point of view, it is already devastating for students.

“While we're paying more, we're getting less,” Jones remarked, noting that for some students, financial aid has not made up for this year's 40 percent jump in fees.

Uehling responded to that point by noting that $20 million of the increased fees went right back into financial aid for students, but she remained unsure of what future possibilities were.

“I don't know what the other solutions are,” Uehling said. “If we don't have the money, we can't offer the services. They're not going to be pleasant choices.”

In two other bills, Leg Council restored funding to the Inside Wave and retained Editor in Chief Kezia Jauron. The remaining four bills on the agenda were tabled until the next meeting, scheduled for Jan. 8.

FACES

“Was $4,000 worth of work done?” Anet said.

While taking care not to make any direct accusations, Anet and Salk said that approximately 60 new course evaluations had been completed — half the number included in last year's FACES. They said this pointed to mismanagement on the part of former FACES Coordinator Kezia Jauron, who headed the publication last year. Jauron is now editor in chief of the Inside Wave.

“We got the old FACES out and went through each subject to see how much work they had done,” Anet said. “There were 120 full course descriptions in the original, but in Kezia's year they completed about 60.”

Salk said several FACES staff members told him that a course evaluation took only “a couple of hours” to complete. The normal starting wage for A.S. student employees is $5 per hour.

At that wage rate, Salk worked out that pay for compiling evaluations would total only $1,500 if each course required five hours of work.

Jauron said she had not been approached about the complaints, and defended her tenure as coordinator. “Most of what they said (about things) in my control is answerable, and I can legitimize them, but I haven't been asked to. Nobody has come to me and asked about any of this stuff,” she said.

“Charts and figures are nice,” she added. “But if you have no idea what the publication is supposed to do, you shouldn't try to render accusations not based in reality.”

Anet and Salk also read from a memo sent by Jauron to former FACES Coordinator Christina Kotwoski, who resigned last week, saying she could not fulfill her responsibilities.

The letter said that the computer disks containing all the information for FACES were missing in action for three months.

“My third problem was this,” the memo read. “In the top left hand drawer of the computer desk is a yellow box of six disks. These disks contain all the info ever printed in FACES but these disks were lost (by former FACES staffer Eric Jensen) for three months. In September, about the time we were supposed to go to press, we found them in Eric's apartment. ... We don't tell anyone that, though.”

Anet pointed out that if the disks were lost, he did not think any work could have been done over the summer. Wage reports show that employees, including Jauron, were paid for compiling evaluations over the summer.

Anet and Salk said that campus Chief of Police John MacPherson suggested seeking an audit of FACES to determine exactly where money was spent.

The two were warned by both Jensen, now Inside Wave news editor, and A.S. Cashiers Manager Matthew Watters that it would be prudent to know the results of the audit before making any accusations.

“I respect the hell out of them for taking the time to research all this, but they should do the audit, find out if there is something wrong and then act,” Jensen said.

“You guys made a great case for the mismanagement of FACES,” Watters said at Wednesday's meeting. “But I think that ... each of you in not going to me, but to Chief MacPherson, already had a set idea in your mind, and that sounds more like a witch hunt.”

As for the future of FACES, A.S. Adviser Dulcie Sinn is confident that a spring edition can be produced if a new coordinator can be found. “All we need is some people up here who can put some effort into it,” she said.

According to Sinn, FACES has $16,000 available to put together an issue, which she said is more than adequate.

The 'Discombobulation' of Student Filmmakers

The flyers for Chris Ball's film, Mayflower Madness bill it as "A Force So Powerful, Women Can't Resist It." Ball hopes that same force — only inclusive of the male gender as well — holds true for the film's premiere Sunday at 8 p.m. in Campbell Hall.

The screening is part of a student film festival which will feature at least six other films, and serve as a benefit for the Filmmaker's Co-op, a campus organization to help students fund the production and exhibition of their own films.

"(The group) has been dormant for some time now," said Ball, a junior film studies major. "We started it up sort of on automatic this year because the Victoria Street Theater and Program Board and Orion Pictures all came together and had a fundraiser for it."

The group collected approximately $600 from the earlier benefit, which featured the premiere screening of the film Slacker.

Ball has booked some of the best-known student videos for Sunday's festival, including a 20-minute Video-8 film entitled Outer Space Robot Visits Ancient Roman Times.

The film, created by Phillip Young, Casey Simpson and Brian Waters, has never had a public screening, but Young describes it as a "discombobulation."

"It's a movie done by poor college students who decided to make a movie about their interpersonal relationships, but it's set in outer space to try to confuse people," the senior English major said.

Admission for the event is $1.56, because, according to Ball, "If 100 people pay $1.56, we break even." But, he quickly added that $1.50 would be acceptable. "It's a penny thing."

APPEAL: Freda Huttenback Cleared of Charges

Continued from p.1 held convictions on two counts of falsifying tax returns and three counts of tax evasion.

The court reversed Freda Huttenback's conviction for aiding and abetting embezzlement, citing a lack of evidence.

Huttenback, who headed the UCSB campus from 1977 until 1986, when he resigned due to the scandal, said that he was pleased with the reversal of his wife's conviction, but that the failure of his own appeal came as a disappointment.

"Sure, I'm annoyed... I've wasted four years," Huttenback said, adding that he blames much of the failure of his appeal on a bad defense in the original trial. Since the appeals process only considers evidence admitted in the original trial, he was at a disadvantage, Huttenback said.

“The odds are very much against you by the time you try to appeal.”

Robert Huttenback former UCSB chancellor

"The odds are very much against you by the time you try to appeal," he said.

In the wake of the decision, Huttenback, who is renowned for his studies in the field of British Imperialism, said he will take "the better part of a month" to decide whether to file another appeal with the state Supreme Court. Money will play a key role in the decision, Huttenback said, and added that the trial has sapped his financial resources.

"I'm in mass debt," he said. "I was broke after the first shot was fired."

Though Assistant District Attorney Patrick McKinley, who prosecuted the Huttenbacks in the original trial, was disappointed that Freda Huttenback's conviction was reversed, he was pleased that the most important conviction was confirmed.

"(Robert) Huttenback was the important part of the case, not his wife," he said.

Huttenback's chances of overturning the decision at the state Supreme Court, added McKinley, are not very good.

"Statistically, ... it's usually a done case when the court of appeals decides," he said. McKinley added that he's glad to put the case behind him, and he is sure university officials feel the same way.

"It was a rough time for the university during the trial. This chancellor (Huttenback) was extremely popular and he did a lot of good things for the campus while he was there," McKinley said.

Despite his financial troubles and the rejection of his appeal, Huttenback said, "We've still got one more hurdle left," referring to the state Supreme Court. In the mean time, added the embattled Huttenback, "I've got to find something to do with myself."

Jeopardizing RecCen Services

Editorial

As we said yesterday, watching the University Center/Recreation Center project stagger along is like having one's very own circus permanently on campus. Unfortunately, behind this catalog of Keystone Cop routines looms a very real threat to the original intent of the RecCen proposal. That intent was to provide UCSB's students with ample facilities for recreational activities.

This threat will become a reality if the RecCen Governance Board approves Chancellor Uehling's pet Section K of the RecCen Governance Board Charter.

Here's the situation: The existing campus swimming pool behind the Old Gym is slated for elimination under the Long Range Development Plan. The RecCen will have two swimming pools. UCSB has several intercollegiate water-sports teams. Once the existing Campus Pool is eliminated, where will the IC teams go to practice? An interesting question with a very obvious answer: to the new RecCen. They've said as much already.

We have already witnessed the open swimming hours at the Campus Pool shrink to one measly hour a day due to the IC teams' practice schedules. We are very proud of these teams' achievements. Their practice pays off. Meanwhile, the solitary hour of swimming time open to the general student body has come to resemble the start of an Ironman competition, the water churned to a froth by those trying to squeeze into the only allotted recreational swimming time.

Although the authors and proponents of the UCen/RecCen proposal have managed many miraculous manipulations of figures in penning the plan, they were never able to tack an extra 13 or so hours onto each day. Sadly, we are left with just 24.

This lack of recreational access was a central theme of the UCen/RecCen campaign and passage in 1990. Students voted the project in based on a desire to expand the facilities available to them. A proposal was submitted to Chancellor Uehling by the governance board last spring which would have made a stipulation of the RecCen charter that IC teams would not — as a team — have access to the new facilities for practice. Uehling effectively vetoed this proposal by refusing to approve it on the grounds that no students should be discriminated against with regard to access.

The obvious shortcoming of this argument is the fact that no students would be singled out. The individual members who comprise the team aren't excluded, the team itself — which is part of a university program — is. Any member of the IC teams would be free to utilize the facilities. The purpose of the proposal was to eliminate the potential monopolization of recreational facilities by IC sports.

Now the board is faced with a vote on a constitutional proposal which will not limit ICA usage in any way. The current proposal only allows the governance board to set bylaws giving different "priorities" to different users. In other words, it opens the door for the ICA.

Although the original charter proposal would have been a final constitutional guarantee that students would have unlimited access to their facilities, the new Section K's bylaws could easily be manipulated or changed.

History has taught us that they will be changed. For those unfamiliar with UCSB's dismal track record on such fronts, the Events Center was originally proposed, constructed and paid for as a "student facility," in order to provide non-intercollegiate athletes/students with a recreational facility. It is obvious today that this "student facility" has become "Pimm's Palace." Intercollegiate basketball has first, last and ultimate dibs on the building.

The fact that the needs of these very successful IC teams took precedence over student needs was another campaign argument posed by UCen/RecCen proponents in favor of new facilities.

One of these proponents was the administration itself. The LRDP and its plan to eliminate the Campus Pool has existed for several years. Chancellor Uehling was undoubtedly aware of this as she backed the proposal for new facilities. Obviously she was aware that the closure would leave only two possible results. Either you eliminate the IC water sports teams, or you betray student interests and simply recreate the problem which the facilities were meant to solve. Obviously, she knew which she would choose.

The solution is to keep the existing pool as well as adding new facilities. The LRDP is not written in stone, and could be changed to spare the Campus Pool.

Students voted to build these facilities, and to pay over $40 million for them. They are proud of the IC athletic teams, but that's a steep entry fee to once again be mere spectators. These facilities are for the students. They are not for university programs. It's time to make sure this project doesn't completely derail.

The entire course of the new RecCen's future service to students hinges upon the governance board's vote. If they approve a weak measure that could — and probably will — allow eventual ICA control of the facilities, and the existing Campus Pool is eliminated, students are screwed. Plain and simple. Millions of student dollars down the drain.

The members of the RecCen governance board must not back down on this.

Smoked Out

Editor, Daily Nexus:

There are some events that take place in this country which serve to help and enlighten the population as a whole. I would like to know why the Nexus would not cooperate in publicizing one of these events. The event was Thursday, Nov. 21. It was the Great American Smokeout. There were repeated calls for assistance made by myself and other volunteers which fell on deaf ears.

Here are a few reasons to help convince you of the importance and the publicity which it deserved:

- 1) It is organized nationwide by volunteers, as it is here by students and staff members.
- 2) Plain and simple, tobacco kills 420,000 people per year in America; illegal drugs account for 8,000 deaths per year.
- 3) Our government subsidizes the tobacco industry.

I would think that a university newspaper, such as the Nexus, would leap at the chance to promote an event which tries to stop the use of a drug which is cultivated by the government of the United States. I would also think that a paper which so enjoys satirizing President Bush would love to ask why he has declared a "war" on drugs while he is subsidizing an industry which kills more than 50 times as many people per year as illegal drugs. It bothers me to see a full-page article on a new "designer drug" and not one ounce of effort into promoting an event to stop a national, in fact worldwide, epidemic. Must we first see something on "A Current Affair" before we read about it in the Nexus?

Anger Into Action

Editor, Daily Nexus:

As a woman, and a rape victim, I can definitely sympathize with the CUNTS and their justifiable anger towards the common occurrence of rape. I mean, how "fair" is it that I was happily hiking in the open foothills of Northern California in broad daylight when a man who had been following me struck up a friendly conversation with me and proceeded to force me at gunpoint off the trail? He tied me up and blindfolded me and raped me but amazingly he didn't kill me. Yet I will never be the same again.

So I, too, am angry. Angry that I am not free, as I once thought, to do what I want when I want. Angry that my experience served only to increase the already sickening numbers of women (and men) who are raped every year. Angry that women are still often looked at as instigators of their attacks, that somehow, even if they didn't "want it," it was their actions that led to the rape. "She shouldn't have been wearing short shorts. She shouldn't have been alone. She shouldn't talk to strangers." Or, in the case of date rape, "She shouldn't have found herself in that situation." So many shouldn't-haves that wouldn't exist if we lived in a perfect world where people didn't try to harm other people. But we don't.

I, too, am angry, and anger can be used as a tool for action, for changing something; that is not right, but I feel that anger should be used positively. To the CUNTS who send accusatory, negative messages to all men, I would say convert that anger to action and help the people who have already suffered the scars of rape. Educate those who have not, to protect themselves. Find ways to reach potential rapists and — instead of increasing their resentment with more accusations — rehumanize their potential targets with true stories and statistics. Perhaps even let them know of ways they can get help in dealing with their own problems. But the hate, and the assumptions that all men are potential rapists who care nothing about stopping rape, which were implied by those cheesy little postcards was not only a waste of time, but a step backward in education. I know it closed a lot of minds that could have helped a movement against rape.

Yeah, we're all angry, but let's do something a little more positive with it.

HIV Skeptic Has His Reasons

Joel Schwartz

Some of you might remember the recent controversy over whether or not Dr. Peter Duesberg, a UC Berkeley biochemistry and molecular biology professor who says that HIV is not the cause of AIDS, should be allowed to participate in the panel discussion on AIDS during the AIDS Awareness Week. After what seemed to be a knock-down, drag-out fight between Michele Guidoni, a senior majoring in biochemistry and psychology, and the powers that be on the AIDS Task Force, Guidoni was overruled and it was decided that it was in the best interests of the students that Professor Duesberg not be invited to the event.

Well for those of you who felt cheated by the AIDS Task Force when they decided not to make you "aware" of Prof. Duesberg's theories during AIDS Awareness Week — don't worry, there is still hope. Duesberg will be speaking on Nov. 26, at 8 p.m. in Isla Vista Theater, about whether or not the retrovirus (HIV) the scientific establishment has determined causes AIDS, actually lives up to its reputation. There will be a nominal $1 admission fee for students and $2 for non-students.

You might be wondering why Prof. Duesberg insists that HIV does not cause AIDS. Well wonder no longer, here are some of Duesberg's arguments in a nutshell.

HIV does not meet Koch's Postulates, the classical criteria for determining whether a disease is infectious and caused by a particular microbe. The postulates are as follows:

Postulate 1: The germ must be found in the affected tissues in all cases of the disease. However, no HIV at all can be isolated from at least 10 to 20 percent of AIDS patients.

Postulate 2: The germ must be isolated from other germs and from the host's (in the case of HIV, the T-cells) body. The amounts of HIV in AIDS patients are typically so low that the virus must be isolated indirectly from a patient, only after first isolating huge numbers of cells from the patient and then reactivating the virus. In classical diseases, enough active virus is present to be isolated directly from the blood or affected tissue; anywhere from 1 million to 1 billion units of virus per milliliter of body fluid can be found during the time most viruses cause disease, and viruses of the same class as HIV are found at levels between 100,000 and 10 million units per milliliter. HIV on the other hand, is usually found in less than five units and never more than a few thousand units per milliliter of blood plasma.

Postulate 3: The germ must cause sickness when injected into healthy hosts. HIV has not been shown to cause disease when injected experimentally into chimpanzees, nor when accidentally injected into human health care workers, even though the virus successfully infects those hosts. Even in the recent case where a woman was supposedly infected with HIV by her dentist, there still haven't been any studies which conclusively prove that HIV is what led to AIDS.

Postulate 4: The same germ must once again be isolated from the newly diseased host. Until the third postulate can be met, this one is irrelevant.

The failure to meet Koch's postulates raises the questions about whether AIDS is even infectious at all. Koch's postulates are the standard criteria for determining disease agents. When they are not met, strong alternative evidence must be produced to support any infectious-agent hypothesis.

The burden of such proof is therefore on those who claim that HIV causes AIDS. This burden is especially high for HIV-hypothesis supporters in view of the special characteristics that had to be attributed to HIV in order to connect it with AIDS. First, the virus had to be credited with a latent period of several years between infection and AIDS — a latent period that keeps having to be extended because HIV is not even behaving in accord with the special characteristics it has arbitrarily been assigned. But when diseases are said to occur only years after infection by a virus, it can be difficult to be sure that other risk factors have not instead caused the disease. Second, because HIV is conspicuously absent from lesions, scientists had to hypothesize that the virus caused disease by indirect means in the body, in spite of a troubling lack of evidence for such notions. Inventions such as these can be used to blame virtually any microbe for any disease. These are only a tiny fraction of Prof. Duesberg's objections, the evidence against the HIV is immense and continues to mount.

What does Prof. Duesberg say causes AIDS then? In brief, Prof. Duesberg puts forward the Risk-AIDS Hypothesis. He believes that the AIDS diseases are entirely separate conditions caused by a variety of factors, most of which have in common only that they involve risk behavior such as drug abuse and other immunosuppressive behavior. This view does not see AIDS as being a transmissible condition at all.

Space does not permit me to articulate just what Prof. Duesberg considers high-risk behavior. You're going to have to come see him to find that out. But I will say this, the risk behavior and procedures he is talking about are commonly known, and yet they have been conspicuously absent from the current AIDS literature.

Prof. Duesberg's credentials speak for themselves. He was billed by the National Institutes of Health (NIH) as one of the 27 most brilliant scientists in America. He has received numerous honors and awards from around the world such as: the Merck Award, 1969; California Scientist of the Year, 1971; First Annual American Medical Center Oncology Award, 1981; Outstanding Investigator Award from the NIH, 1986; Elected to the National Academy of Sciences, 1986; Fogarty Scholar-In-Residence at the NIH, Bethesda, Md., 1986-87; Wissenschaftspreis, Hannover, Germany, 1988; Lichtfield Lecturer, 1988.

Obviously, Prof. Duesberg is no lightweight scientist, and believe me, the scientific and medical establishment know this. They know Prof. Duesberg's credentials are impeccable. So instead of going after his credentials or his theories, many scientists, who have a lot of time, money and their reputations tied up in the current HIV hypothesis have chosen to try to discredit Prof. Duesberg by leveling ad hominem attacks against him, calling him a quack or even a flat-earthier.

For those of you who have succumbed to this kind of easy-way-out propaganda, I would just like to say that many of the world's great scientists of old were considered "quacks." Galileo was branded a heretic, put in jail, and excommunicated for having the audacity to insist that the earth was not center of the universe. Of course, now we know he was right after all. Sorry about that, Galileo. If you study the history of science a clear pattern emerges: The greatest scientists and thinkers, from Galileo to Pasteur to Semmelweis, have almost always been slandered, maligned and persecuted precisely because they had something new to say which flew in the face of established beliefs.

The only expectation we have for Prof. Duesberg's visit here is that a free exchange of ideas takes place between the students and Peter Duesberg. For as Dr. Robert Root-Bernstein once said, "It doesn't matter whether Duesberg is right or wrong. The point is, he's the only one who's behaving like a scientist should, who's asking critical questions."

Joel Schwartz is a senior majoring in religious studies.

Forest and Water Protection Act such a success.

Over 60 students gave their time to help gather more than 1,450 signatures which will help put this desperately needed forestry protection plan on the ballot. In addition, they also registered over 50 people to vote. Without these people, who are willing to stand up and help change something they feel is wrong, the Earth would continue to be abused as it has for the last century.

The more than 1,450 people who took a minute and signed the forestry act, are also to be given credit. It may be very easy to just walk on by someone asking you to sign something, but because you didn't, you helped to get an initiative on the ballot that will ban the ecologically devastating practice of clearcutting and help protect the last five percent of California's ancient Redwoods.

The task of protecting the small remainder of California forestland is essential if there is to be a forest for future generations. Thanks a lot for your help, it's greatly appreciated.

Grand Illusion

Editor, Daily Nexus:

I AM VERY INSULTED.

I, along with many others, went to see the renowned illusionist Andre Kole, to "enjoy hours of entertainment and demonstrations dealing with the illusion and reality of the supernatural world." However, this is not what happened. I was deceived.

The false advertisements posted all over campus with their great picture of a man walking on water didn't tell what really was to happen at the show. No... If they told the truth, half of the people would not have shown up! Granted, Campus Crusade did sponsor this. I am a little reluctant to be angry, however, either the night should have been sold as a magic show, or been a free church gospel hour.

Ten tricks in two hours is not a very good show. I mean, hey, I was falling asleep listening to his stories about Jesus and how he has found his relationship with God. I really didn't give a shit. I paid $5 to see magic, not to be told that if I don't take God's word I will go to hell. And yes, that is what was implied.

"After a hundred or so reincarnations, someone here should be able to have learned to levitate or walk on water," Andre said. Well, he is obviously referring to the eastern religions, which he apparently does not know too much about. So, he therefore offers a $25,000 reward for anyone who can either walk on water or levitate. Ooooh! Just another little gadget to make his audience believe more and more that what he believes in is the true way to go.

From what I gathered from this show, Andre Kole is not an illusionist, he is a preacher and a liar. He figured if he advertised to come hear him talk, no one would show up. He therefore became friends with David Copperfield, picked up a few tricks and lied to the public about a magic show. In between tricks, he would tell you that what you see is just an illusion like all religions besides Christianity. "Bollocks," as my English hall-mate would say to that crock.

It's obvious this man is completely uneducated in the study of religion. He should take some time when he travels these 74 countries and learn what they believe and he might find out that they all have some very interesting things in common.

I'll end with this one thought. Either advertise and produce, or lie and deceive. Either way, we're all going to the same place. If you think I'm going to hell, I'll see ya there!

LOREN DANIEL KOSS

HOBOKEN, N.J. — A symposium of social scientists said here today that society is showing signs of slipping slowly backward into the shallow sea it slithered its way out of seventeen million years ago.

"What we're watching here is a whitewashing of the walls that bear witness to the wayward, winding path which we are walking and which will lead us right to where the Romans went," speaker Walter Wilkinson said. "We've got to read the writing on the wall."

Indicating that the individual's integrity in the face of immense injustices will inwardly crumble, conferees said it is inevitable that this instability will instill insurrection in all indigent world populations.

"My, my, my," said Milton Morris, who manages a Hoboken manufacturing company. "I guess we better start to swim."

Think, then write.

UCSB professors, administrators and community members gathered at the downtown University Club to discuss the future of the university's forthcoming School of Environmental Science and Management.

No 'Looking Back' for New ES School

By Eric Garrett
Reporter

Biology Professor John Melack told his audience that environmental problems can't be solved by "looking back."

And that's precisely what the university's forthcoming School of Environmental Science and Management won't be doing, Melack told a crowd at the University Club Wednesday evening.

Melack, who chaired the committee that drafted the proposal for the new school, took the stage to point out that the first professional school UCSB has seen in 24 years will serve the campus with a mixture of applied science and managerial training.

According to Melack, the fundamental purpose of the school will be to create students who can help solve the growing contemporary environmental problems.

"What is happening in the last few years is obvious. We as human beings are changing our environment," Melack said. "The need is to create programs which will help us solve these issues."

"I think science is becoming more and more a needed skill in policy making," Melack said. "We have to train people to some extent in existing laws and regulation."

Melack also said there is a crucial need for professionals who can communicate at both the scientific and the political levels. "We are not trying to produce environmental activists, we are trying to create people with balance. One of the key things is training people in how to make decisions."

According to Ed Birch, vice chancellor for institutional advancement, prepping for the opening of the school has already begun. "The new school is underway in the implementation stage," he said. "We are working through the details of the curriculum right now, and it has been genuinely approved."

Academically, Melack said the school will accommodate about 75 master's students and 55 doctoral candidates when the program is in full swing.

The Ph.D. program will stress research to a greater extent than the MA program, Melack said. "(MAs) are not research scientists; they will provide a societal function," Melack said. "The Ph.D. is largely a research degree, but will be multidisciplinary."

The school will also offer mid-career associate positions — a three-month program designed to acquaint professionals with recent advances in research techniques.

The school will include a dean, associate dean, 13 full faculty appointments, five part-time faculty and 30 affiliate professors who will bring courses of interest into the program, Melack said.

Construction of a building for the school will not be completed until 1997, while student enrollment will begin in 1994, said Jody Kaufman, executive director of academic affairs for the school.

OKANES

have been Central Michigan against Coastal Carolina — as long as it's college basketball.

Maybe what makes college basketball so special is that it gives one that foundation for following great players that go on to have careers in the NBA. When we're younger, we know the best players in the world play in the NBA, but maybe we didn't watch them develop into that status throughout their careers in college. College basketball makes stars, and it's those stars that the professional ranks then choose from to continue to be stars in the NBA.

That's one thing I've enjoyed about the NBA season — checking the box scores every morning to see how those rookies, who were just playing in the college ranks last year, are faring at that next level. Players like Larry Johnson, Stacey Augmon and Greg Anthony, who just last February were strutting their stuff on the Thunderdome floor, are now shedding their UNLV skins and fulfilling a dream.

And that brings us to what may be the one entity that separates college basketball from all other sports at all other levels — the dream of winning the "Big Dance." Never does a sporting event trigger as much excitement in fans as does the NCAA's postseason basketball tournament. It's a microcosm of an entire season in a three-week period — a blitz of games where one bad performance can change the direction of a team's season. The only difference is that in the NCAA tourney, that direction is home.

Tournament time is the time of year when we get to find out just what teams are really made of. Teams that have jacked up win-loss records because they have a schedule full of those Coastal Carolinas meet teams that have less than desired records but were beat up in a powerful conference that may have had four or five nationally ranked teams. The "Big Dance" allows all these teams to fight amongst themselves in order to decide just who is the cream of the crop in college basketball.

March Madness is still five months away. But, even that will be too soon.

The most interesting battle during the preseason was for the starting off-guard spot, which Stewart won from junior Idris Jones. But both have shot very well in the preseason, and Pimm is quick to point out that the starting spot means very little.

"Stewart has come along nicely from last year, and has earned the starting spot," Pimm said. "But Idris knows he'll play 20 minutes (half the game), so it hasn't hurt his play at all. Both are shooting the ball well, and both have kept improving."

Pimm also said that he expects a considerable amount of production out of his bench. Key substitutes include senior point guard Kason Jackson, who had his best preseason at Santa Barbara, and freshman forward Doug Muse, who is expected to be one of the impact freshman in the Big West Conference.

University. He, too, has looked much more controlled and relaxed during the preseason, as he looks to improve his assists-to-turnovers ratio of 131-106 of a year ago.

"He's a bright, young man who may have hurried himself along last year in trying to catch up with our system," said Pimm of Kelly. "There was just so much pressure from last year. He's a good player, and we expect a lot out of him this year."

Also assuming starting roles will be senior center Sam Robson, junior swingman Mike Meyer and senior shooting guard Ray Stewart.

"Sam brings renewed vigor to this team, as long as he's physically sound," Pimm said. "Mike seems more comfortable with the offense every day, and his confidence grows along with it. (Meyer's) matured, and that makes this a very good team."

vakian) game last week. That's what it's all about in (the beginning) — getting to be the best we can be heading into Big West play," he said.

Santa Barbara is not without its own returning starters, led by senior power forward and team captain Lucius Davis. Davis has been very impressive in the 1991 preseason, scoring a game-high 23 points in the Blue-Gold game and scoring 25 on a perfect 11-for-11 shooting. Pimm sees Davis as a "complete package" and someone the Gauchos can look to for much-needed leadership.

Taking on the point-guard duties for the second year will be junior Ray Kelly, who struggled last year to live up to the immense expectations that followed him after transferring to UCSB from Texas Christian

Thunderdome to Be Rockin' and Rollin' Tonight

A-MUSE-ING — It's showtime for freshman forward Doug Muse and the Gauchos as they take the floor tonight in their season-opener against the Univ. of Richmond at the Thunderdome at 7:30 p.m.

Gauchos to Tip Off 1991-92 Season Against Not So Itsy Bitsy Spiders

By Josh Elliott
Staff Writer

Enough with the mediocre "Trencin of Czechoslovakias." Enough with the intrasquad scrimmages and Blue-Gold games. And enough with the preseason rankings and predictions and hype. The real-life, regular-season opener has arrived, and in grand fashion, as the UCSB men's basketball team will host an experienced, tough University of Richmond squad tonight at 7:30 in the Thunderdome (KCSB 91.9 FM).

For Santa Barbara, it will be an immediate test that will show how the Gauchos have rebounded from last year's 14-15 finish. Richmond brings with it crucial game experience, as all five starters return after a 22-10 season that included an upset of #2-seeded Syracuse in a first-round game in last season's NCAA Tournament. But a hard-fought opener is just what the Gauchos want, according to UCSB Head Coach Jerry Pimm.

"It's a tough opener, there's no doubt about it," Pimm said. "But my philosophy is that you want to play the very best teams whenever you can, wherever you can, and as many times as you can, and this team certainly qualifies as one of the very best teams in the country."

Pick up Tickets Today at Storke

Tickets for tonight's UCSB men's basketball game against the University of Richmond will be handed out today between noon and 4 p.m. at Storke Plaza.

A ticket will be given to each UCSB student with a valid reg card. A student may bring up to two valid reg cards.

The game will begin at 7:30 p.m. in the Thunderdome, with the first fans being allowed into the gym at 7 p.m.

All Smiles As College Basketball Has Begun

I arrived home at my apartment Wednesday evening after a not-so-grueling day of class and work, as usual my mind cluttered with a half a million different things, when suddenly only one thing became important. As I walked up the steps leading to my front door and passed our window that reveals the main room, I caught a glimpse of our television.

The University of Kentucky was playing West Virginia in the first round of college basketball's preseason NIT.

Life is good.

There's something about the beginning of the college basketball season that makes me wonder how I survive between April and November. For five months out of the year, we get a constant, euphoric rush of college basketball, then suddenly it comes to an abrupt conclusion after the championship game of the NCAA postseason tournament.

The rush has begun.

In the next few weeks, people will probably be asking me why I am in such a better mood than usual. That's because the beginning of the college basketball season for me is like the first day of summer for an elementary school kid—it's the beginning of an annual period that is looked forward to every year.

Not that I have any kind of special preference for Kentucky/West Virginia basketball games, but that's just the point. For the kid during the summer, it doesn't matter what day of the week it is—all he knows is that he doesn't have to go to school that day. For the college basketball junkie, it doesn't matter who's playing—all he knows is that it's college basketball.

I've often asked myself what it is about college basketball that makes me gravitate to it so much. The NBA has better athletes and they play at a higher level, but if most NBA teams had been playing on another channel Wednesday night, I still would have left my TV dial on ESPN so I could hear Dick Vitale yelp and scream about the best version of sports around. Kentucky/West Virginia is a good game, but it could

All-Far West Teams Include Four Gauchos

The 1991 UCSB women's soccer season, which climaxed with a surprise NCAA Tournament berth, had another happy ending Thursday when it was announced that four Gauchos were named to the All-Far West team.

Midfielder Laurie Hill, defender Linda Dorn and goalkeeper Jan Urich received first-team honors, while freshman forward Julie Bushman was named to the second team. Hill, Dorn and Urich played their final game for UCSB (12-7-0) in the Gauchos' 4-0 opening-round playoff loss to the University of Hartford.

Hill was expected to be one of the team's stars in 1991, and she did not disappoint. A finalist for the Hermann Trophy, a prestigious national Player of the Year award, she collected five goals and four assists while serving as the UCSB team captain.

Dorn's offensive production was a pleasant surprise for the Gauchos, as she scored seven goals and led the team with 16 points while playing the stopper position. Dorn was the only defender named to the first team.

Urich was inconsistent

Spikers Easily Sweep Jet-Lagged NMSU to Lock-up Fourth-Place

By Jonathan Okanes
Staff Writer

The next time the New Mexico State women's volleyball team comes to UCSB, NMSU Head Coach Craig Choate may want to talk to his travel agent first.

The Roadrunners did not catch a flight to Santa Barbara until Thursday afternoon for their match with the 12th-ranked Gauchos on Thursday night, and Choate and his squad probably would have rather stayed at the airport. UCSB needed just 52 minutes to put away the Roadrunners at Robertson Gymnasium, 15-4, 15-2, 15-6, in front of a sparse but vocal crowd of 152 fans. With the win, UCSB clinched fourth place in the Big West Conference and with it an almost-for-certain bid to host Fresno State in the first round of the NCAA playoffs in two weeks.

Unlike last Friday night when Santa Barbara started off fairly strong against Cal State Northridge but then had trouble putting the Matadors away, Thursday night the Gauchos (19-8, 12-5) came out with torrid serving to put NMSU in a hole that they could never climb out of.

"I think the plane ride may have affected them," UCSB Head Coach Kathy Gregory said. "And then once we started serving bullets it was real hard for them. We were a little lethargic, but when they were warming up I could tell that they cared because they knew it was a league game."

"Our main goal tonight was to come out and play with the energy that is characteristic of the Gauchos," said UCSB outside hitter Julie Pitois, who led Santa Barbara in kills for the eighth consecutive match with 11. "Kathy reminded us before the match never to underestimate an opponent, so we came out and played with a lot of intensity. To be a complete team you have to be able to get up for not only the teams you want to beat, but also for the teams that don't have a great reputation."

All told, UCSB came up with eight service aces on the evening, four of those in first game alone. And when Gaucho serves weren't falling clean, they were still consistently tough enough to prevent the Roadrunners (10-18, 5-12) from establishing their offense.

"The way they line up makes it easy to serve tough against," said UCSB outside hitter Kristie Ryan, who led the Gauchos defensively with a match-high 13 digs. "They have a lot of open areas on the court. Our serving obvi-
