

T.M. Storke: 1876-1971

Sunday would have marked the 99th birthday of one of the nation's grand old men of journalism and an elder statesman of California—Thomas More Storke.

For 70 of his years Storke played an important role in reporting and recording the changes. As an editor and publisher of the Santa Barbara News-Press he was the living conscience of the community. He won a Pulitzer Prize for his expose of the John Birch Society.

Most of all, though, Thomas Storke has made his mark as a good citizen and as a great American. It is in this role that the Daily Nexus and thousands of friends and admirers salute him in today's special edition.

Storke Pushed College Into University System

By Martine White

Thomas More Storke considered the entrance of Santa Barbara College into the University of California system, along with the building of Cachuma Dam, his two greatest achievements. He believed that, in addition to having the most beautiful campus site, UCSB possessed the potential to become the greatest cultural and educational institution in the U.S., if not the world. This is according to his autobiography, "California Editor."

Early in the 1900's, when Storke was just establishing himself as a newspaper publisher, he and other leading citizens got together and acquired the Blake school property in downtown Santa Barbara. At first, only women attended. Then in 1913, the school was moved to the Riviera campus and became co-ed. They later applied for certification and called it Santa Barbara State Teacher's College.

of a science building and a library. These were finished in 1954, at which time the school again changed campuses.

The Mesa property became SB City College, and the Riviera buildings were bought up by the Brooks Foundation; Metropolitan Theatres turned the auditorium into the Riviera Theatre.

Administrators initially foresaw maximum enrollment as being approximately 3,500. However, statisticians estimated an added minimum enrollment in the UC system of 55,000 by 1970. This meant that UCSB had to prepare for a minimum of 10,000.

REGENT APPOINTMENT

During all of this time, Storke remained on the sidelines, only indirectly involved with the University. When Francis J. Neylan, a long-time friend of Storke's, decided to resign his position on the Board of Regents, Governor Goodwin Knight asked Storke to take his place. Storke pointed out that Neylan had resigned because he was nearing 70, and he himself was almost 80, but Knight persisted. Storke finally accepted and served on the Board for five years.

1958 saw the advent of what Storke considered "to be the greatest cultural advance of any community activity with which I have been associated." UCSB acquired major league status with Berkeley and Los Angeles, and became the "general" university of the UC system.

LARGE GIFTS

Aside from having a powerful influence in the formation and beginnings of UCSB, Storke made substantial gifts to the scholarship funds and especially to the Student Publications Building. He donated $600,000 which, when matched by the Regents (as was their policy) from non-tax revenue monies, finally produced a total of $1.2 million to be spent on communication facilities alone.

According to George Obern, manager of the UCSB public information office, "Storke always insisted that his name not be associated with the tower—that was the Regents' project. He was interested only in the publications building, though he was, of course, excited that the bell tower should be constructed right on top. In spite of his poor health...he used to come out almost every day to see how the construction was coming along."

Obern points out that Storke is

LIBERAL ARTS PROGRAM

In 1935, it was agreed that the college should have a more general appeal, so a liberal arts program was instituted and the name changed to Santa Barbara State College. When World War II broke out, it was envisioned that the campus would expand and construction of an industrial arts department began on new property on the Mesa. In the meantime, Storke and others were speaking with UC regents about the possibility of Santa Barbara College entering the UC system.

In 1944, the legislature passed a bill formalizing the idea, which Governor Earl Warren signed. Pearl Chase, often referred to as the mother of SB College, prepared the presentation for the Regents and convinced them to accept it.

Several years later, in 1948, the War Assets Administration (in charge of disposing of military property) decided to offer the marine bases near the airport as a new campus site at a cost of one dollar. The Santa Barbara community, and Storke especially, were very excited about this new development and immediately began construction

Storke's Family Tree Had Roots Deep in California

By Edward Mackie

A seventh-generation Californian, Thomas Storke was descended from Jose Francisco de Ortega, who first saw Santa Barbara in 1769 as an officer in the army of the Spanish King. His great-grandfather, a Yankee sailor, was enamored with the region and married Rafaela Ortega, herself of Spanish descent. They were wed in 1823 and settled down in Santa Barbara, which was little more than a backward pueblo but unmistakably beautiful.

PRESIDIO TOWN

Still in the service of the King, Ortega, with the aid of some local Indians, built a protective presidio over which he did not preside for long, for he was called away to another station. Upon his distinguished retirement from the military in 1795, Ortega returned to Santa Barbara.

Honored with a land grant from the King, the Ortega acreage included such landmarks as Gaviota Pass and Refugio Bay.

The long line of land grants immeasurably changed the California way of life. The Spanish tradition — replete with all its customs, economy and vagaries — firmly took root in wake of the rancho era. The peppers and palms and sweet songs of Old Spain, the rapturous click of castanets and the kaleidoscopic swirl of femininity are the scenes most remembered in history.

OX CART LIFE

"Life under the Dons was casual," wrote Storke, who was born at the tail end of the Spanish tradition. "It was geared to the sleepy tempo of the ox cart and the softly strummed guitar. Everyone rode horseback. The Indians under the mission padres became a domesticated labor class to till the fields, orchards, and vineyards."

Doors were never locked and time, if it could be called that, was little more than manana.

When Daniel Hill jumped ship around 1825, he did so to take the hand of Rafaela Ortega's granddaughter. A typical Massachusetts Yankee, Hill endowed Storke's bloodline with its first American strain.

A carpenter and mason, Hill fit into and soon came to dominate Santa Barbara life. The wealthiest of neighbors trod on floors of hardened earth but Hill went them one better; he built the only wooden floor in the city.

AMERICAN RULE

Santa Barbara seasawed back and forth between the Mexican and American armies in the 1840's but Santa Barbarans were quite content under Old Glory, even when the gold rush struck in 1848. Miners counted upon foodstuffs and beefsteak which the Santa Barbarans had aplenty. A single beefsteak went for nineteen dollars in the boom towns.

An entrepreneur who took advantage of the food shortage, T. Wallace More, chose as his wife the daughter of Daniel Hill; both were Storke's maternal grandparents.

Inspired by the need for better educational institutions, More helped bring young scholars to the community, among them Charles Albert Storke, a 25-year-old Civil War veteran. Storke had been a prisoner of war but more important a former printer. After teaching in Santa Barbara for nearly a year, he married the daughter of More in 1873.

Storke had initially begun the Los Angeles Daily Herald. He had done so during the disastrous panic of 1873; the paper was forced to fold and Storke returned to Santa Barbara.

T.M. STORKE BORN

In 1876 a son was born to Storke and his wife, christened Thomas More Storke, after his grandfather. "If I had been born ten years later I would have missed entirely the true Spanish period in California and Santa Barbara," wrote Storke. "It was going out in 1876."

the only person in the United States to have donated towards communications facilities in schools which did not have journalism departments (he also financed a publications building at Stanford, where he received his degree). In appreciation of the gift, the Regents had the following engraved on one of the tower's bells: "These bells ring for freedom of the press and in tribute to editor-publisher T.M. Storke, whose affection for the University has made this building possible."

UCEN FINANCING

Another major contribution was a $100,000 gift (again matched by the Regents) to help finance additions to the UCen. Francis Sedgewick, a distinguished Santa Ynez sculptor, molded a bronze head of Storke to be set inside the center in memory of his generosity.

Storke also persuaded many of his friends to make gifts and even "begged and borrowed palm and olive trees in order to landscape the school in the true Santa Barbara tradition," according to Obern.

When University authorities once again brought up expansion, Storke offered to sell his property at one fourth of market value. This ground (the area between Francisco Torres Towers and the stadium) is now referred to as the Storke campus and is being kept aside for future development.

Though busy with the News-Press in Santa Barbara, Storke remained in close association with school officials, especially Chancellor Cheadle. Obern reports that he visited often and liked to be filled in regularly on the university's progress.

"His" campus (said Cheadle in "A Tribute to Storke" on October 16, 1971) conferred upon him, through Clark Kerr, former UC president, its highest award some 15 years ago — an honorary Doctor of Laws degree. In addition, the university cast 100 "T.M. Storke for excellence" medals in recognition of his forceful support of UCSB. One is given each year to a student exemplifying: distinguished scholarship; extraordinary service to the community or the university; and T.M.'s courage, achievement, persistence and scholarship.

In the 94 years of Storke's life, both Obern and Joe Kovach, publications director of ASUCSB, agree that "As a civilian, he had more influence than anyone else, other than those directly involved with the university."

Memorable Words From T.M. Storke

"In the years I have published my newspaper I have learned one lesson well—that a newspaper will not be listened to or win respect if it pussyfoots in stating its editorial beliefs."

"Even a character assassin is entitled to develop his own political philosophy and put the hard sell behind it."

"In the end, the only protection against such aberrations as the John Birch Society...lies in the informed good sense of the people."

"Every newspaperman in America worth his salt has cherished the dream that some day something he has written in the heat of the daily grind would be chosen as worthy of the Pulitzer Prize."

"I believe that the responsibility for maintaining all of the freedoms—freedom of speech, freedom of religion, and freedom of the press—rests on the shoulders of the men and women who are the press."

"The greatest sin of the American press is the sin of omission—the sin of refusing to take a stand on issues that might become too "hot" to handle."

"Many times...choices have been exceedingly hard to make; the right course is not always signposted."

Senator Storke Enjoys Brief, Successful Washington Term

By Becky Morrow

Thomas M. Storke had always been involved with politics, but never as an office seeker. As a newspaper editor and convention delegate, he was instrumental in determining the candidacies of other men, yet he himself never contended for any office. Thus, when he was asked to complete the Senatorial term of William McAdoo in November of 1938, Storke was thrust into a new facet of the political scene.

His political orientation first began at age 13 when Storke's father, a two term state legislator who courageously protested the flagrant abuses of California's infamous Southern Pacific Railroad political machine, traveled with Thomas to an extra session of the legislature in the summer of 1889.

LIFE INTEREST

As Storke recounted these younger days, "I was only 13 at the time, a highly-impressionable age, and I believe my life long interest in politics — as an observer, never as an office seeker — stemmed from the boyhood contact."

Even though Storke was a tremendous aid to McAdoo throughout his term, McAdoo was under tremendous pressure as Senator. The first few years of the New Deal saw millions clamoring for jobs and many migrated to California with expectations of receiving parts of the numerous pension plans which the state had to offer — "EPIC", the Townsend Plan, "Ham and Eggs", etc.

Mail poured into Washington at an astounding rate of 7,000 letters a day. Constituents were hungry and jobless and they directed their appeals to their

Washington representative.

Rumors began to spread very slowly that McAdoo's time in the Senate was limited. One autumn day in 1937, Storke met with Harry Chandler of the LA Times, at which time Storke was informed of Governor Frank Merriam's definite intentions to appoint Storke to complete McAdoo's unexpired term.

DIDN'T WANT JOB

Storke responded with disbelief. "Mr. McAdoo would never resign, Harry, and even if he did, I am not a politician. I never sought a political office in my life," Storke claimed. "I am not prepared to go to the United States Senate and frankly, I wouldn't want to if I got the chance."

The rumor began to gain substance with Storke when he received a confidential correspondence from McAdoo stating his hesitancy about running for office again in 1938. After all, McAdoo had recently turned 70 and he was ruining his health by diligent application to the responsibilities of his job.

It seems to be the case, however, that men in public office rarely leave of their own accord and McAdoo proved no exception. He entered the 1938 campaign a tired and sick old man with a lack of the energy required for such a fight.

Storke backed McAdoo in his campaign and traveled to numerous political rallies throughout the state with the incumbent Senator. Despite Storke's backing, McAdoo's refusal to back the "Ham and Eggs" machine cost him the nomination.

Thus, in a lame duck position, McAdoo decided to resign his Senate seat on November 1 and accept the Chairmanship of the Board of the then government-owned American President Lines steamship company.

The Senatorial seat was vacant and it was Governor Merriam's responsibility to fill the position. Although in the opposite political party from Storke, his long time support of Merriam helped land him the appointment.

Storke's response was one of amazement. He recalled, "I sat there in a daze. I had never, at any time or in any manner, solicited this high honor. In all my life I had never run for elective public office. I had turned down many offers of appointment, including an ambassadorship. Yet, despite this record of reluctance, here I found myself the junior United States Senator from California, teamed-up with my long admired friend Hiram Johnson!"

Leaving his long time home in Santa Barbara, Storke proceeded to Washington for a short term of two months to assume the unfinished business left by McAdoo.

FLOOD OF REQUESTS

Upon his arrival, Storke was already immersed in a stack of mail encompassing a variety of requests from school, sanitation, and flood control districts for funds to carry out their various projects.

The only way to get such appropriations was to visit the man in control — Secretary of Interior Harold Ickes. Thus, with the difficult task before him of requesting $10 million for California projects, Storke met with Ickes on the evening preceding the December 30

Ickes had a reputation of being an irascible character, and the task which lay before Storke had little hope of success.

He proved to be everything his reputation had alluded to and Storke's requests were strenuously argued. Recognizing the futility of continuing on that vein, Storke chatted about personal matters, such as his friendship with Senator Johnson and Ickes' political involvements with the Bull Moose Party in (Cont. on p. 20, col: 1)

Rude Remarks

Hedged Bets, Part II

By Martin Chorich

While the Republican party is gearing up for a dramatic dogfight between the forces of supposed light and the forces of bumbling amiability in 1976, the Democrats face a numbing fog of political confusion. It has become something of a standing joke that within the ranks of the Democratic majority in the Senate, there are two factions, those who are thinking of running for President and those who already are.

The Democrats can almost taste victory. The public attitude to the current incumbent ranges from apathy to hostility. The worst economic situation since the 1930's shows few signs of abating in a politically significant manner by the next election. Kissinger's foreign policy coups have a way of looking good for no longer than a few weeks at a time. With all of this, an analyst might be tempted to believe that the Democrats have an excellent chance of capturing the White House, but in all likelihood they will go and blow it by nominating someone.

It is quite possible that no matter who the Democrats nominate, the Democratic candidate will have been rendered unpalatable to a majority of voters by reason of the processes and procedures that were necessary to nominate him. Due to the multiplicity of candidates, and the new delegate selection procedures, the road to nomination will be studded with compromises and dirty deals. The stain of politics as usual that will inevitably mark the nominee, is a sure turnoff to the electorate who has had its puritan sensibilities aroused by the scandals of the past few years.

Another factor which stands in the way of a Democratic victory next November is the weaknesses of the candidates themselves. There is not a man running for President on the Democratic side which would not make a perfectly acceptable Vice-President, but it is hard to imagine anybody now under consideration actually holding down the top slot. The Democratic field consists not so much of presidential timber, but of Vice-Presidential shrubbery.

Not all of these eager vote junkies will stay in the race forever. There are only so many primaries, and only so much money to go around. Of those running, the campaigns of Sanford, Bentsen, Schapp, and probably Udall are moribund. Of those who will last until after the first primary or two, Shriver and Carter are the next most likely to drop through the cracks. Those who seem to stand a good chance of making it through California include Harris, Jackson, and Wallace, if his health doesn't fail him. Let me hedge this further by saying that at least two of the people I have projected for failure will probably get lucky and hang on until the bitter end.

Despite all of this, the man who most likely will run off with the nomination is Hubert Humphrey. Humphrey knows better than to allow himself to be cut to tiny bits in the primaries. He plans to sit it out until the convention and disingenuously make frequent hints as to his availability for the nomination in the case of a draft.

Drafts, however, do not arise spontaneously. Humphrey will try to facilitate the deadlock in the convention by attempting to maintain a stalemated balance of power among the candidates. Humphrey will also find himself encouraging the formation of "uncommitted" delegations. In Illinois for example, Mayor Daley is planning to run Senator Adlai Stevenson III as a favorite son candidate. It would surprise no one if the Stevenson delegation were to be delivered to Humphrey lock, stock and barrel when the balloting begins.

Farm Labor Act: Too Much Too Soon

By Lloyd Eveland

Thousands of words have already been written about California's Agricultural Labor Relations Act, and rightly so. For the first time in America's history, agricultural employees have the right to decide whether or not they want to be represented by a labor union.

Lloyd Eveland is president of the Council of California Growers. This article is reprinted from the Los Angeles Times by permission.

However, most news reports on the law's implementation have been in the style of sports-page box scores: how many elections the United Farm Workers of America and the Teamsters have each won, and by how much.

But there is much more to the story of this law than a contest between unions to see who can get the most workers — and ultimately negotiate the most contracts for the highest wages and fringe benefits. The real issue, despite the controversy over organizing techniques and the way elections are being run, is what the unionization of California farm workers is going to mean to consumers when growers are forced to pass along increased labor costs.

But the most immediate problem is with the farm labor law itself. It is not working.

The ALRA's preamble proclaims that "the people of California seek to insure peace in the agricultural fields by guaranteeing justice for all agricultural workers and stability in labor relations."

Unfortunately, the system by which those sentiments were to be translated into reality has proved inadequate to the task. Perhaps it has been a case of "too much, too soon." Under pressure from the governor and the unions, the Agricultural Labor Relations Board had only a few weeks to put together a set of administrative rules and regulations and hire a staff. As a result, many mistakes have been made, and many questions remain unanswered.

The composition of the board, whose five members were appointed by Gov. Brown, is another sore point with employers. The governor said he was going to name people with judicial qualifications who had no connections with either the unions or agriculture. As it turned out, the governor's appointees were a former UFW official, a Roman Catholic bishop known to be sympathetic to the UFW, an attorney active in civil-rights and social-justice groups, a law professor-attorney who has represented unions and, finally, the representative of an agricultural organization.

However honest and well-intentioned these people may be, the past associations of most of them open their decisions to question.

Growers, for instance, are extremely upset with the ALRB's administrative ruling (upheld by the State Supreme Court) which allows union organizers to enter fields without owner permission, to talk to workers for an hour before and after work and during the lunch break. As property owners, we believe this rule is unlawful, violating not only a grower's rights but also those of a worker, who may not want to be put in a position of having to talk to a union representative.

The result is that an incredible number of charges and challenges have been filed — both serious and trivial — in connection with nearly every representation election held to date.

We growers contend that the rule permitting access to the fields was never needed. The UFW argues that it is not being properly enforced. We argue that, if the board's membership had been properly balanced, the rule, and the unnecessary furor that it has caused, would have never come about.

The unions have plenty of opportunities to contact laborers during nonworking hours. Most agricultural workers are no more isolated than industrial employees, whom unions have had little difficulty in contacting.

Another example of board bias occurred in Fresno, where the local ALRB allowed the UFW to submit a master list of more than 9,000 of its dues-authorization card holders in lieu of formal petitions necessary to qualify for representational elections. Using such a list is clearly a violation of the ALRA, which states that each union petition must be accompanied by signatures or cards specifically indicating a worker's support for that union's attempt to call an election.

Confusion has also been fostered by the voting status accorded so-called "economic strikers." The law states that any worker who has been involved in a strike at a ranch anytime in the past three years must be allowed to vote in a representational election at that ranch — even though he may not currently be employed there.

Yet the board has never fully defined what an "economic striker" is. If it follows precedent set by the National Labor Relations Act (as required specifically), the board would find few "economic strikers" in California. So far, however, the ALRB has ignored the NLRA guidelines.

With the farm labor act less than three months old, there have been hundreds of charges hurled by the growers, the UFW and the Teamsters. As a result, few elections have been certified.

The grower's charges include intimidation of workers at the polls by UFW supporters, poor poll supervision by ALRB agents, allowing economic strikers to vote without showing proper identification and inconsistencies in polling hours.

In one case, at Salinas, UFW demonstrators — including Cesar Chavez — were allowed within a short distance of the polls during balloting. Workers were insulted and threatened, and some refused to vote because they feared UFW reprisals.

Chavez and the UFW have themselves made a series of charges but, as usual, most are false or grossly exaggerated. For example, Chavez has complained that workers were often taken in company buses to cast their ballots. How else were they to be brought in from the fields to vote? Moreover, in most cases union observers were allowed to accompany the workers in the buses.

Chavez has demanded that elections be held on "neutral territory" such as in a local community hall, rather than on the ranches. But nearly all National Labor Relations Board elections are held in the place of business — the most logical location and the one most convenient for employees.

One of the UFW's pet charges is that there is collusion between growers and Teamsters. This allegation has no foundation. The Teamsters are receiving no special favors. Rather, on ranches where

Hedged Betting...

Looking at the other candidates who are most likely to succeed, Jackson, Harris, and Wallace, each of them has his own particular sort of liabilities. Jackson hasn't come up with an original thought since the fifties. Harris' economic program is nothing more than the populist tipping-over of economic outhouses. And as far as Wallace goes, even if his health doesn't fail along the campaign trail, his brand of racist venom will never earn him the accolades of any Democrat with more than a single digit IQ.

One could easily imagine that scrappy Governor taking advantage of his wheelchair by starting to use a cigarette holder and delivering fireside harangues to the nation over the radio.

Of the three mentioned above, the most interesting is Harris. Before an audience of fawning pseudo-down home bourgeois liberals, Harris' Huey Long stylings masquerade as honesty.

Like every other demagogic aberration which has appeared on the American scene since William Jennings Bryan, Harris will eventually be rejected by a wised up electorate, if not at the convention in November.

Even though I've spent these past two columns explaining why no one can be elected next year, the fact remains that somebody, against all rules of probability and logic, will win the election. As pleasant as it might be to forego executive leadership for a few years, some ambitious clown will in all likelihood install himself as the nation's leader.

Cachuma Dam: A Bitter Battle In Career of Publisher Storke

By Jim Tang

One of Tom Storke's most successful campaigns was the construction of Cachuma Dam. It took 18 years for him to win the fight for more water in Santa Barbara, and it was certainly one of the most bitter.

The south coast population was booming along with the rest of California in 1940, when Storke went to Oscar Chapman of the Reclamation Bureau in the Department of the Interior. Recognizing the value to the area in terms of flood control and growth, he had to work against the bureaucratic red tape, political opponents who disapproved of the New Deal, and local residents who were opposed to a forty-year loan to cover the $44 million cost.

CRUCIAL ELECTION

Nine years after the initial idea was broadcast to the Department of Interior, the matter was put to a vote of the citizens of Santa Barbara County. Realizing that the federal government would require an overwhelming mandate from the local populace before going ahead with the project, Storke threw the weight of the Santa Barbara News-Press into the fray.

As recounted in his autobiography, "California Editor", Storke faced "personal abuse and slander from a small minority of diehards...opposed to government spending." His most vehement opponent was Lewis Welch, a ranchowner whose land would have been inundated by the proposed reservoir.

Seventh-Generation Californian

Storke was first introduced to politics when his politician father took him to a state convention. The Southern Pacific Railroad ruled California politics at the time, as both he and his father understood well.

STANFORD DAYS

With little preparation during high school, young Storke was ushered off to Stanford for four eventful, frolicking years where he dabbled in campus politics under the tutelage of Herbert Hoover, class of '95.

After the Stanford experience, Storke cast about for a career — which he found in journalism, first as a reporter for $6 a week, then, within two years, as an editor-publisher. Up to his ears in debt, Storke pulled his paper out of the doldrums and made it a going concern. Eventually he consolidated and merged all of his rival papers in Santa Barbara under the banner of the News-Press.

BOSS RUEF

Hardly thirty years of age, Storke had a ringside seat in the planned prosecution of "Boss" Abraham Ruef of San Francisco. He witnessed the devastation of San Francisco and with it the inevitable downfall of Ruef's hoodlum gangs. The city had had enough and put them out of business at the turn of the century.

Though registered as a Democrat, Storke consistently supported Republican state governors; he said that the Democrats hadn't enough honest or competent men in the race. History largely vindicated this position. Among the notables he had supported were Earl Warren and Hiram Johnson, to name two.

Under Storke's editorship Santa Barbara grew from a village of 3,000 to a mini-megalopolis. Storke either fathered or contributed to the city's post office building, the municipal airport, UCSB and the $44,000,000 Cachuma Dam.

Upon William McAdoo's resignation from the U.S. Senate in 1938, Frank Merriam, a Republican governor, appointed Storke to the unexpired term.

Another Republican, Governor Goodwin Knight, appointed Storke as Regent of the University of California. He was awarded the Pulitzer Prize in 1961 for his fight against the John Birch Society, as well as the Lovejoy Fellowship and the Lauterbach Award for championing civil rights. Storke died in 1971 at age 94.

APRIL 12, 1958- Water spilled over Cachuma Dam for the first time at 3:32 p.m., as shown by the clock held by Storke. It was the culmination of an 18-year struggle for water.

SPANISH DICTATOR FRANCISCO FRANCO DIED Wednesday at the age of 82. Prince Juan Carlos de Borbon, Franco's hand-picked successor, will be installed as Spain's new king tomorrow. President Ford sent a message of sympathy yesterday to Juan Carlos, assuring him that the United States will continue a policy of friendship and cooperation. Ford's statement described Franco as having led Spain through "a significant era in Spanish history."

RONALD REAGAN FORMALLY ANNOUNCED HIS CANDIDACY for the 1976 Republican presidential nomination yesterday. The 64-year-old former California governor said he would not be surprised if some other Republicans now enter the race. In prepared remarks, Reagan said he made his announcement in Washington because, in his words, "It is such an intimate part of our troubles: inflation, recession, unemployment, bureaucracy and centralized power." He added, "For all its power, big government seems powerless to solve our problems anymore."

THE NATIONAL CONFERENCE OF ROMAN CATHOLIC BISHOPS voted yesterday to conduct a new campaign for a Constitutional amendment banning abortions. The bishops meeting in Washington also voted to campaign against abortion through educational messages.

AN OLDER AND HEAVIER ELDRIDGE CLEAVER returned to the United States Wednesday after seven years of fugitive exile abroad. He is currently jailed in the Federal Metropolitan Correctional Center in downtown San Diego, pending trial on charges of assault and attempted murder stemming from an Oakland shootout in 1968.

PRESIDENT FORD wrote to leaders of both parties in Congress yesterday urging that a Senate Intelligence Committee report on CIA involvement in assassinations of foreign leaders not be made public. Ford said he does not think release of the report is in the national interest.

The Senate went into secret session yesterday to consider the 400-page report on the extent of CIA involvement in assassination plots and attempts under four presidents. Majority leader Mike Mansfield told reporters before the Senate session began that "tremendous pressure" is being put on Congress by the administration to keep all or parts of the report secret.

DONALD RUMSFELD was sworn in yesterday at the Pentagon as Defense Secretary as President Ford attended the ceremony. In remarks prepared for the ceremony, Ford said the ousting of former Secretary James Schlesinger will mean no lessening of the nation's defense posture. Ford said Rumsfeld agrees with him that a strong national defense is the surest guardian of the nation's independence.

A FEDERAL JUDGE IN SACRAMENTO said yesterday that the prosecution's conduct in the Lynette Fromme trial, though "not a model," does not warrant dismissing the charge that she tried to kill President Ford.

THE CITY OF SAN DIEGO, reversing an earlier vote, decided yesterday to join a lawsuit filed by 40 other Southern California cities and counties to block offshore oil leases. The lawsuit was filed in reaction to the Federal Government's announced plans to lease one and one-quarter million acres of Pacific waters off Southern California to major oil companies.

PRESIDENT FORD aid yesterday that a House Subcommittee's vote to cite Secretary of State Kissinger for contempt "involves grave matters affecting our conduct of foreign policy." Ford said in a letter released yesterday that the controversy "raises questions which go to the ability of our Republic to govern itself affectively." The President told the committee that the matter should be resolved through what he termed "cooperation and adoption of a spirit of mutual trust and respect."

Farm Labor Act...

they have contracts. Teamster representatives have been authorized to approach workers only in connection with contract matters: No organizing activity is allowed.

Let me make another point regarding Teamster contracts: Where they exist, they remain ineffective until an election is certified. Even in cases where the UFW has an apparent majority of votes, the workers still are bound by the Teamster contract and all that goes with it — including dues deductions — until the board makes a final determination.

With all of the objections, challenges, charges and other assorted paper work, attorneys are having a field day. The situation is so confusing that some growers believe all elections should be declared void and conducted again.

The growers are willing to do their part to make the law work. All they want from the board is an even break.

More Housing Proposed

Saxon Recommends Regent Approval for UCSB's LRDP

By Claude Ruibal

President David Saxon has recommended that the Regents approve the Long Range Development Plan (LRDP) for the Santa Barbara campus. However, in making such a request, Saxon has stated that it be accepted merely as a "guide to future development of the campus...without any commitment as to any specific project listed in the proposed construction program."

The Regents must review the Environmental Impact Report (EIR) prior to approval in conformance with University procedure required by the state that, "a project shall not be approved which involves adverse consequences to the environment..."

NEW LRDP

This new 1975 LRDP differs in four ways from the LRDP of 1968.

- It seeks to meet the needs of a smaller enrollment (15,000 as opposed to 25,000).

- It recognizes the increasing importance of environmental values.

- It emphasizes the planning process — rather than the plan itself — in order to provide flexibility and to accommodate changing needs and opportunities.

- It acknowledges the close relationship between the campus and its environs — particularly the community of Isla Vista.

According to the LRDP the University will continue to provide housing for 25 percent of the estimated future enrollment of 15,000 and to achieve this, housing for 550 more students will be needed.

HOUSING

The LRDP provides for the building of additional housing for 385 students on the main campus near San Rafael dorm. Together with this, apartments near new married student housing are planned. They would accommodate 165 students.

According to the final EIR, implementation of the LRDP will effect the environment at UCSB in a number of ways.

The campus enrollment would increase by 900 students. This would increase the population of the Santa Barbara area by 2,000 people, including students, if a multiplier factor of 2.1 is used.

The increased population would, according to the report, "increase the demand for water," which is already in short supply. Water demand on campus due to new facilities and additional housing could be "within the existing campus allotment."

ADVERSE EFFECTS

Increased traffic, air pollution, and noise levels could, "adversely affect campus parking" according to the report, yet this could be alleviated by the use of alternative means of transportation.

The student increase could bring about a severe housing shortage in I.V., forcing students to live further away from campus. Combined with this the high demand for housing could push I.V. rental prices prohibitively high for students on a fixed income.

Several mitigating measures are proposed in the final EIR to alleviate these possible problems.

- The use of private automobiles will be discouraged, with no increase proposed in the present parking capacity. The campus will implement improved public transit, paid for in part by student fees.

- The campus will implement further water conservation programs.

- Additional housing is proposed on campus for both single and married students.

- Areas of major ecological significance or containing archeological sites are reserved from development.

Yosemite Hike Course

Against the beautiful backdrop of Yosemite National Park's snow-covered peaks and sculpted granite faces, UCSB Extension will present a five-day course in Winter Mountaineering and Environmental Studies, December 15-19.

Using the park as a natural laboratory, the class will hike into remote areas of the Yosemite wilderness to study first-hand such topics as man's activities and their relation to natural change, the adaptations of mammals to the winter environment and glaciology.

The course is presented in cooperation with the Yosemite Institute, which will provide room and board as well as Sunday evening lodgings and the necessary cross-country hiking equipment.

There will be an organizational meeting on December 2 in Room 2515 of Phelps Hall on the UCSB campus. Enrollment is limited. For further information phone 961-3231.

Alpha Phi Fashion Show

Pretty coeds and haute fashion will be the order of the day this Saturday, as the Gamma Beta Chapter of Alpha Phi Sorority will present an afternoon fashion show and dessert. The affair, to be held in the Program Lounge of UC Santa Barbara's University Center, begins with a dessert at 1 p.m. followed by a style show. Saturday's show will feature some of UCSB's Alpha Phi girls modeling clothes from Peaches, Santa Barbara's newest fashion boutique.

The event has been coordinated by Silver Holliday, fashion coordinator from Peaches. Not only will those in attendance view the latest fashions, they will also have an opportunity to win the door prize, a lovely evening gown, donated especially for the style show by Peaches. Tickets may be purchased at the door or by contacting the Alpha Phi Sorority house.

TRIBUTE TO T.M. STORKE

Thomas M. Storke
1876 - 1971

Thomas M. Storke was, in every sense of the word, the father of our campus, as his great friend Clark Kerr loved to say. Tom was greatly influential — as Chief Justice Earl Warren intimately knows — in our becoming a part of the University of California system. He worked diligently and ingeniously for the acquisition and improvement of an old Marine air base which is emerging as one of the most beautiful campuses anywhere. As a Regent for five years and later as a citizen he lent his forceful support as we set about defining our goals as a general university campus. In gratitude, "his" campus conferred upon him through Clark Kerr, its highest award some eleven years ago — the honorary Doctor of Laws degree.

He foresaw that UCSB was destined to set a high standard of scholarship and culture. He said so on many occasions, but I particularly remember his remarks at dedication ceremonies for the Student Publications Building which bears his name: "I love this institution," he said. "I have seen it develop since its birth in 1891. I have had a small part in its development and have followed its course throughout seventy or more years of expansion, until today it is potentially the greatest campus in the California system, and culturally it can be one of the greatest educational institutions in the world."

Those words are only a part of T.M.'s legacy to us. He provided scholarships for many students and a substantial sum to the University Center where hundreds enjoy its cultural and recreational facilities. And student journalists every day probe our way of life, stick in their needles, and rather smugly enjoy freedom of the press and speech in their use of the communications media within a structure which his major contribution made possible.

An additional tribute to this great citizen will live for nearly a hundred years. It is the Thomas M. Storke Medal for Excellence which is the highest award we confer on a graduating student. One hundred bronze medals were cast by Duke Sedgwick to present to the student each year who exemplifies "distinguished scholarship and extraordinary university or community service" and who possesses T.M.'s courage, persistence, achievement, and leadership.

Vernon I Chaddle
Chancellor

It was a memorable occasion on Sunday, Sept. 28, 1969 when the Thomas M. Storke Student Communications Building and Carillon Tower were dedicated at UCSB. The Tower contains a 61-bell, five octave, chromatic carillon — the only one of its kind in existence. The Storke Building, considered one of the finest on any campus in the world, houses the Daily Nexus, KCSB-FM, La Cumbre yearbook and Media Administration offices. Dedication addresses given on that day are included on these pages. Earl Warren is shown on the right addressing the crowd.

Earl Warren Address

Address by Hon. Earl Warren
At UCSB Publications Building Dedication

This is a meaningful day in the life of the University of California at Santa Barbara, and I am happy to participate in it. This beautiful building with its imposing tower and its melodious bells would grace any campus in the world.

Here, looking out on the broad Pacific, it is a symbol of one of the great freedoms we cherish in America. It is demonstrative of our determination of the right of the people to know. Here young people will be able to probe our way of life, research the great problems of any day, and translate their knowledge into means of communication; - communication which will make it meaningful to the public for their use in keeping abreast of the constantly changing society in which we are living.

It will make the touchstones of journalism accuracy, integrity, insight and vision. It will close the gap between the natural sciences and the social sciences which, in recent years, has been widening to an alarming degree. Here will be taught the public responsibility involved in mass communications.

In the last quarter of a century, concurrently with the population explosion, there has also been a worldwide communications explosion. Since the announcement of the Four Freedoms, there has been a demand on the part of people everywhere of the right to know in order that they may acquire or protect those Freedoms - Freedom of Speech and Expression, Freedom of Worship, Freedom from Want, and Freedom from Fear.

The explosion of communications has resulted, and today in the most remote areas people can hear almost instantaneously what happens in every part of the world. Some time ago when I was in the Philippines, I was told by President Romulo of the University there that the small rice farmer of any of their most isolated islands knows almost immediately what is happening, not only in Manila, but in Washington, Paris and London by listening to his little transistor as he trudges along behind his buffalo plowing his field.

There is no longer a problem of communicating with any part of the world, but there is a great problem in determining what the content of the news should be. It involves dangers which are too often overlooked as dangers which involve the future of the world.

I have only recently returned from a trip around the world in the course of which I stopped in many countries and followed the news as well as I could in each of them. In many instances, I found the same incident reported in different publications in almost opposite ways. Much of it was not news but propaganda. This is not surprising because in more countries than otherwise there is no such thing as Freedom of the Press or Freedom of Speech and Expression.

Most of the news items I refer to were provocative, both internally and externally. It seems to me that whether or not we are ever to have a peaceful world will depend very largely upon the standards of journalism that are to prevail in the coming years.

From a negative standpoint, bad journalism could well be the provocation for more wars. Good journalism would be a strong instrument of peace.

This beautiful structure in this cultural Center could well become a beacon light for that kind of journalism. I know that is the guiding thought of your benefactor, Senator Thomas M. Storke, whose life has been devoted to that kind of journalism.

He began the publication of his newspaper in this city the first day of this century, and ever since has pursued good causes, whether they were popular or unpopular at the moment. At the age of 86, he was awarded the Pulitzer

T.M. Storke Address

Address by Thomas M. Storke
At Dedication of Thomas M. Storke
Student Communications Building at UCSB

It is difficult to find words to express my gratitude for the honor accorded to me, and to all of us gathered here, by the presence of Earl Warren, who is the true father of the Santa Barbara campus. When he was Governor, he was solely responsible for the University of California system taking over the Santa Barbara State College.

Mr. Warren himself is a graduate of the University of California, Berkeley, and is without question its most distinguished graduate. He goes down in California history as a great Governor, and in the history of the world as one of the greatest Chief Justices of the United States.

His presence here today is the highest honor that has come to me in my long life in California, approaching 93 years.

My contribution to this campus building fulfills a dream I have cherished for years, and I am particularly pleased that I am sharing this dream, now being accomplished, with the students.

I want to take this occasion to answer the question that is frequently asked of me: What prompted your interest in contributing to this building? Dr. Clark Kerr, then the University's distinguished President, and Chancellor Vernon Cheadle were responsible for my interest and particularly in this publication building - largely because they knew that my long career had been in journalism.

I love this institution. I have seen it develop since its birth in 1891. I have had a small part in its development and have followed its course throughout the 70 or more years of expansion, until today it is potentially the greatest campus in the California system, and culturally it can be one of the greatest educational institutions in the world.

I spent more than 70 years of my life in journalism, all of which was here in Santa Barbara and on my own newspapers. Santa Barbara is known throughout the world as a city of culture - culture in the highest sense. As a journalist I have tried to make some contribution to the cultural development of Santa Barbara.

I foresaw that our campus was destined to set a high standard of scholarship and culture among academic institutions of the country. It was my aim in helping to provide the publication building to participate in that cultural movement. I felt that adequate space and attractive housing for modern and efficient working facilities in a setting of natural beauty and architectural harmony would be reflected in the quality of the student publications that will be produced here.

It is my hope that the publications coming from this building will be the finest examples of journalism developed on any campus in America - perhaps in the world. Talented students are here. Brilliant faculty members are here. Working together, they can produce publications of national and international scope - for the enlightenment of civilized people everywhere.

Prize and the Nieman and courageous crusade against the

It is quite natural then philanthropy toward a School that the truth will keep us free.

Also, it is natural that philanthropy to the campus of at Santa Barbara because he is word the father of this camp saying this because I remember brain child of his.

When he first came to Sacramento words fell on deaf ears and wilderness. But he and Asse introduced the Bill, persevered. not be repeated here, but in the this Institution was chartered. things which fell to my lot during of California was to sign that Bill.

Since that time and for many years Storke mothered this campus development until it has been to state of development.

How happy he must deserve beautiful and practical building goals, and with a realization of State and Nation. I am happy University of California at Santa into the future, when all of us will be reminded of the great and of the noble spirit which legacy to your Institution.

Dr. Cheadle Address

Address by UCSB Chancellor Vernon I. Cheadle
At Storke Publications Building Dedication

Mr. Chairman, Chief Justice Warren, Senator Storke, Regents Boyd and Canady, President Hitch, President Kerr, Student President James, Student Editors, Rebecca Wilson, Sunny Mowbray, Wayne Rascati, Radio Manager Cy Godfrey, Distinguished Guests, and Friends. This is an historic moment for all of us at this segment of U.C. So it is with perhaps understandable pride that I welcome all of you to this campus of the University of California.

I don't use the word "historic" lightly. This occasion is historic for a number of reasons. Let me mention a few. First, this occasion represents the culmination of a fruitful cooperative arrangement between a man of great public achievement and a great University, whose Board of Regents represents the people of the State generally and the University Community, specifically - students, faculty, and staff. Monies from taxes have not been used in this project.

Secondly, this publication building together with the immediately surrounding environs, represents a focus for the campus, a central attraction of surpassing beauty and of great cultural potential. It will continue to be that, I think, long after all those involved here on this occasion will have departed this pleasant planet.

Thirdly, this student publication building obviously emphasizes performance on the part of the students. It is therefore of great significance to me, at least, that this building is on this site with the performing arts as its immediate neighbors, and with student residence halls nearby. It reinforces our determination to manifest our long-range interest in student-oriented activities. How to organize the maintenance and uses of all the student-oriented facilities that are not strictly a part of formal academic programs and thus not supportable by tax funds from State sources is open to discussion. But our interest in the ultimate and consistent fundamental success and solvency of all such facilities is unflinching.

The fourth historical dimension of this day is a more personal one. This formal dedication celebrates a nearly four-year series of meetings and discussions between Tom Storke and me about this building, about publications and communication media, about students, about the political world, about writing, about a wide variety of matters. Obviously, the active planning and construction of this building complex itself came as a result of dedicated cooperation among many people in the University in addition to the Storke family and The Regents. Our campus architect Robert Henderson and his staff, University architect Robert Evans, Vice-President Elmo Morgan, and Vice-Chancellor Ray Varley were foremost in this cooperative effort, along with students successively manning the communication media on the campus. To all of these people and especially to the students I express my gratitude and hopefully that of the campus. I wish to make special note of Clark & Morgan, the executive architects who designed this beautiful complex - not yet completed as you see.

For myself, the most satisfying part of this day is the opportunity to say publicly how grateful I am for Tom Storke's support and for his generosity, and how grateful we both are for our wives' forbearance. Tom I have not agreed, by a long shot, on all the matters we have discussed or on my stewardship of this campus. But at every turn we have gained respect, hopefully mutual respect, and I have come to love this man extraordinary as he is in so many respects.

It is fitting indeed that on this day we meet to dedicate this building named after a man whose longevity is exceeded only by his achievements.

UC President Address

President Hitch's Remarks at the Dedication
Of the Thomas M. Storke Student Publications Building

Mr. Chairman, Chancellor Cheadle, Distinguished Guests, Ladies and Gentlemen:

On behalf of The Regents and the University community, I am delighted to bring you greetings and to welcome you on this happy occasion. It is particularly happy because it brings together on one platform men whose devoted efforts have meant so much to this University.

All of us are aware of the very great debt we owe to Tom Storke, Earl Warren and Clark Kerr. Journalist, jurist, scholar - all unique, yet united in their devotion to the University of California and to the public good. It is an honor to share the platform with these distinguished men. And all of us in the Santa Barbara community are familiar with the great job Vernon Cheadle has done here.

But today we are gathered to pay tribute to one of these men especially and to dedicate the Thomas M. Storke Student Publications Building. The building is many things. It is first of all a uniquely beautiful addition to this already beautiful campus and to the University as a whole. Our environment is much the richer for it.

But this building is much more than an ornament. It is a working building, a home for the award-winning student publications of this campus, a place where students undoubtedly will write - sometimes poetically, sometimes poorly - a place where they will learn the arts and the skills of the free press.

Today, however, this building has a special meaning, for it symbolizes the talent, the effort, and the generosity of a great man.

Mr. Storke once wrote:

"I have held several high honors in the political and business world during my lifetime. None do I value more than my appointment to the Board of Regents of the University of California."

Let me say on behalf of the University that we have known no finer friend than Tom Storke. As many of you know, there probably wouldn't even be a Santa Barbara campus of the University without him, and his tangible and intangible gifts to the University and particularly to this campus have been truly invaluable. As a matter of fact, if we were to total all the things that Mr. Storke has done for us, I would probably feel obliged to ask The Regents to deed the campus over to him.

I would like to close by reading the citation Mr. Storke received when he was awarded the honorary Doctor of Laws degree here at Santa Barbara in 1960. It seems to me that the words of the citation have acquired even more significance as each year has passed; they are particularly appropriate today.

"Thomas More Storke: California editor, publisher, and author. Energetic in the service of your city, your state, and your nation. Imbued with a forceful and imaginative vision of the community's duty to provide those physical and cultural resources which enrich the lives of its citizens. Former Regent of the University of California, with a particular corner in your affections reserved for the Santa Barbara campus. We take pleasure today in honoring you for the high hopes of the past which have become the achievements of the present."

Thank you very much.

*The University of California awarded T.M. Storke an honorary degree at Charter Day ceremonies in 1960, with U.C. President Clark Kerr reading the citation stating that Storke is "imbued with a forceful and imaginative vision of the community's duty to provide those physical and cultural resources that enrich the lives of its citizens." ## Clark Kerr Address

Address by Clark Kerr, Former UC President
At Dedication of UCSB Communications Building

Mr. Chairman, Ladies and Gentlemen, including a number of long-time friends:

Mr. Chairman, may I say that this is the first occasion in quite some time that I have been introduced to an audience of the University of California, and I was a little curious as to how you might introduce me. But I noticed the simplicity of your introduction: "Former President of the University of California." There is a bit more to the story than that, as some of you may know. The fact is, I left the office of the President of the University of California exactly as I entered it. Which was: Fired with enthusiasm.

It is a very great pleasure to be on the Santa Barbara campus, and to participate once again in a ceremony honoring Tom Storke. It was suggested that I might speak briefly about Tom's influence on this beautiful campus, because I saw his contributions at first hand closer and longer than anyone else in the University. I should like to recall the briefest of conversations on the Davis campus of the University of California in October of 1957. I had just been elected the next president of the University by the Board of Regents. After the meeting Tom Storke came up to me. He didn't congratulate me, he didn't shake my hand. He just - in that way he has - took his forefinger and tapped me on the chest and said, "Don't forget Santa Barbara!" And I said, "Tom, I won't."

I knew how he felt about Santa Barbara - that it had been neglected. He had been influential in having what was then Santa Barbara State College become part of the University of California in 1944. While I was the Chancellor at Berkeley, and he was a Regent, I had heard his comments about the neglect at Santa Barbara. And this was my own observation on my visits here. So Tom said, "Don't neglect Santa Barbara." And he was right. Beyond that, the University of California needed Santa Barbara. We were shortly to be faced with what was then called the "tidal wave of students" and also there was here, a very great opportunity with this wonderful location, between the ocean and the mountains, and the support of a community which was really quite tremendous.

So we went to work, consulting Tom all the way, and with Tom's support we took for granted the support of the Board of Regents. In September, 1958, there was held here the most important meeting in the history of the campus, in which I placed before the Board of Regents a program which they unanimously adopted. It was to give the campus a new goal. No longer Santa Barbara College, but now the University of California at Santa Barbara. No longer essentially an undergraduate college, but now a general campus.

To give work to the Ph.D. degree, with the expectation to have eventually a full range of professional schools. It also had new leadership with Sam Gould appointed as the first chancellor in the history of the campus, to be followed so effectively by Vernon Cheadle.

There began a golden age for this campus - the period of its fastest development, both in quantity and quality, in its past history and also, prospectively, in its future. The golden age when the campus took its definite form. And the Marine buildings gave way to the beautiful permanent buildings.

The campus has grown from 2,700 students to 13,500 this fall; from 46 graduate students to now some 1,900; from no Ph.D. programs to 23. And more of everything is still to come.

The miracle has been, not just that all this was done, but that it was done so well. This campus is now well on its way to being one of the most beautiful campuses in the world, and has started toward being one of the most famous as well. And Tom Storke helped every step of the way. We counted on him for advice, encouragement, interest, and support. He served as a Regent only from 1955 to 1960, but since then he's been a Regent, not by appointment, but by respect.

After 1960, I acted as if Tom Storke were still a Regent. Sam Gould did and so did Vernon Cheadle. He is the only person so treated in the 14 years that I was a Chancellor and President, and as I have read the history of the University of California, the only person in all of its history so treated. Decisions big and small were discussed with him, not out of duty, but out of regard.

In the long history of Santa Barbara, which will go on for many centuries, these years are the most important, and Tom Storke has been the most important person during these years. Tom's vision and wisdom and devotion will stand forever as the true cornerstones of this campus. When we dedicated Storke Plaza a few years back as the center of this campus, I spoke of Tom as the guardian and protector of the Santa Barbara campus. And Tom Storke will stand forever as the guiding spirit of the Santa Barbara campus during its most important years.

The bronze bust of Thomas More Storke done by the late Francis Minturn Sedgwick is currently displayed in the UCSB library. At one time the Storke bust was a UCen main lobby fixture where students would rub his nose for good luck on their final exams.

Thomas More Storke

1876 - 1971

Thomas More Storke was an uncomplicated uncommon man.

Let no eulogist cloud his memory with narrow labels ill-fitted to his soaring spirit and searching mind.

Tom Storke was neither Democrat nor Republican.

He was neither conservative nor liberal.

He was neither hawk nor dove.

He was fiercely independent and proudly American.

He was an individualist as rugged as the California mountains he loved so well.

Tom Storke's North Star was truth. It was the lodestone of his politics, his religion and his profession.

His loves were four: his family, his country, his God and his work.

In his 95 years less a month and a week, this uncommon man made his mark in journalism, education and statesmanship.

Most of all, though, Tom Storke made his mark in the humanities. He was a responsible and responsive citizen.

To his friends - yes, and to his enemies - he was a special breed. Privileged to be his friend, we mourn his passing.

Two Intern Positions Open in Security Investigation Center

By Gary Miner

Over the past decade, intelligence agencies of the United States Government conducted surveillance of thousands of American citizens. These people were not being investigated because they were suspected of committing crimes, but because of their political opinions. Some of these agencies went even further and engaged in counter-intelligence and covert activities aimed at persons and organizations critical of the government.

One organization working to meet this challenge is the Center for National Security Studies. This non-profit study center is dedicated to researching and publishing reports on national security institutions. They also work on ways to legislate fundamental reforms of the intelligence agencies.

Among the staff members of the Center are former members of the CIA, FBI and other agencies, as well as experts in the field. Some members are: Morton Haplerian, former Deputy Assistant Secretary of Defense and staff member of the National Security Council under Kissinger; Victor Marchetti, former staff officer in the Office of the Director of the CIA; and John Marks, former CIA agent in Vietnam as an advisor to the so-called "pacification" program.

the A.S. Office, and the Political Science Department Office.

Work is available for those who are interested in the problems of an uncontrolled intelligence community, but unable to apply for the Washington internship. By contacting the Center, information can be obtained by individuals or groups interested in working within their own community. Write to:

Center for National Security Studies
1212 Maryland Avenue, N.E.
Washington D.C. 20005

Those interested in working at the Washington Center, apply TODAY. Persons interested in working locally or who would like more information, write today. If there is no change in the United States intelligence operations soon, the means to change it may be non-existent.

INTERNSHIP AVAILABLE

The Center's Staff is willing to place one or two capable students from UCSB in their Washington D.C. office to do research in the area of abuses. It will be possible to earn UC credits for the work done at the Center. The selection of interns will be made through the UCSB Capitol Hill Program.

The necessary qualifications for applicants are: a minimum 3.2 GPA, the ability to research and write well, and the willingness to commit oneself to hard work for three months. Juniors and seniors are preferable.

As the first internship is being offered for Winter Quarter, it is necessary to act quickly. Applications are available at the Capitol Hill Office in the UCen,

'Aqueous Inclinations' Ingenious

By Maureen Mackey

If you like to invest part of yourself in the art you view at an exhibit, even if it means offering body hair and having castings made of your nipples for display, you had a once-in-a-lifetime opportunity last Saturday night at the opening of Louise Munyan's Aqueous Inclinations. Though there's no castings being taken now, there's still a lot to see in this show at the Artist's Response Gallery.

The title Aqueous Inclinations comes from Ms. Munyan's belief that water is an erotic medium, and the theme of water runs throughout the show. Noticing all the masks taken from the artist's face in and out of water, you may detect a strong narcissistic tendency also in this work. Ms. Munyan says that "the creation of art is an act of self-love", and images of herself help make this an extremely personal exhibit.

Yet another strong conviction of the artist is that it's necessary for the viewer to become part of the art he sees, to integrate himself into the experience of his viewing. She feels that the viewer is too distanced from most art, and she wants to break down some barriers. That's the reason for the castings that she was taking from the crowd on opening night, adding them to her display of erogenous zones of the body.

Indeed, the most sensational part of Ms. Munyan's show is the display of castings taken from the lips, nipples, and who-knows-where-else of the body. (I didn't know where and I wasn't about to guess.)

Speaking with the artist and her assistant Carole McCloud enlightened me on this part of the exhibit: they revealed that the castings were taken from male volunteers gleaned from local nude beaches. Knowing this, I appreciated the fine irony of people's reactions in the gallery. One guy was so impressed by the sight of so many nipples together in one place ("Man, look at those boobs!") that he called all his friends over, who were equally enthusiastic in their appreciation, none suspecting that they were admiring specimens of male and not female beauty.

This satire of breast-fixation was even clearer in a radically-altered version of the famous WWII photograph of Churchill, Roosevelt and Stalin, endowing these world leaders with an over-abundance of female attributes. Nearby are copies of the 19th-century painting "Dejeuner Sur l'Herbe," which was the scandal of its day with its nude females next to decorously-dressed males; only in these copies the women were fully-clothed and the men are the ones who are exposed.

The rest of the works in the exhibit are dominated by sinuous lines and voluptuous forms, with the theme of water constantly recurring. I especially liked a work that consisted of three transparent layers of plastic, each painted and hung from the ceiling one in front of the other. The combined images of the three paintings suggested swirling, murky water, and when the entire work swung from its wire the effect was almost hypnotically fluid.

Aqueous Inclinations will run through Dec. 4, at the Artist's Response Gallery in Isla Vista located next to Borsodi's at 934 Embarcadero del Norte.

It's open 12:00 to 10:00 p.m. Tuesdays through Sundays and closed on Mondays.

The Parthenon Dance Company will perform in Campbell Hall Dec. 1 at 8 p.m.

Maytals' Energy Arousing

By Dean Hoffman

Toots and the Maytals, the eight-member Jamaican ensemble performed a joyously well-received set at the Granada Theater last Thursday night which set the growing leagues of local reggae enthusiasts dancing in the aisles with glee.

Probably the definitive element in reggae is its simplicity; yet, within those facile, flowing melodies and catchy rhythmic patterns can be found a wealth of melodic and visceral power and appeal.

This simplicity was enhanced by the group's effortless, easy-going stage manner. The musicians, notably the keyboardist, percussionist and the two rhythm guitarists, furnished a constant, unerring backup to the songs, yet played with an off-hand flair that gave much of the program its feeling of high energy and spontaneity. This aspect was also apparent in the affable stage presence of lead vocalist Toots Hibbert, who sang with a style that was engagingly off-key yet with a seemingly unlimited energy, and who exercised expert audience control, bringing the crowd to its feet many times throughout the show.

Opening the show was the Trinidad Calypso Steel Band, who although somewhat hampered by the sound system, exhibited fast and generally precise instrumental skill, especially in the improvisations of its lead player. The RnB vocal stylings of its drummer were also noteworthy.

FOR JUST ONE MOMENT

We seek support from united walls, propped against the lashings of universal pain.
Peering up and out
and then inward—
Searching for the warmth
the fiery soul burns, drenched in the passion
of an untimely loss.
For just one moment
the watery glaze of sullen eyes was betrayed in the flickering shadows of a dying candle.
For just one moment—
One moment.

Our minds are numbed
and logic bounces and drops
Silent with only hollow echoes.
Where is the rationality of a temporal decree?
Where....

But for just one moment feel the inner awe of a loving being.
Touch the hand of one longing to touch.
Share the tear—
Embrace the stream
that will carry us to the edge of a horizon.

A THOUGHT

Migrating ducks approach the glistening lake as armies of men lie in wait, prepared to do war.
The rustling bushes betray the lusting stalkers and still the ducks approach.
Their death is told in startling blasts shattering the quiet sky.
Yielding the gift of life—a greater gift was sought.
To peer into the vast universe

Leg Council Discusses Self Payment; Foreign Lit. Attacked

By David Hodges

At this week's A.S. Legislative Council meeting, held in the El Congresso Library, members debated whether or not they should be paid for their efforts. Representative Tracy St. John felt, "Money will make people more conscientious."

The proposed cost of paying council members is $3,600, approximately $300 per year for representatives. Representative Scott Brummitt wanted "more money for summer council members."

Finance Board Chairman Dave Gooding was "adamantly opposed. I'm against the fact that you have to be paid to do a good job and RHA is not that much work." Residence Housing Association (RHA) representatives receive additional monies for their work on that body.

The remuneration vote will be decided at 5 p.m. on Thursday.

In lieu of the negligence of some Leg Council ad hoc committees to submit reports or hold meetings, Leg Council passed a motion that all ad hoc committees turn in a written report each week.

The Jewish Student's Union was given a grant of $150 for operational expenses. Last week Leg Council refused to give the Union an underwrite of $150. The recent Zionist rally was paid for with outside funds.

Leg Council also endorsed World Fast Day, which is going to be held the Monday before Thanksgiving.

Rep. Jeff Setness expressed his displeasure at the amount of foreign literature in the library as compared with law journals. Setness stated, "They have a Soviet Journal on Military Capability written in Russian, but their law journals only go back to '68."

A displaced homemaker bill that would provide aid for divorced, widowed, or otherwise estranged homemakers was endorsed by Leg Council. Another Senate bill was endorsed which would give public access to University of California tenure recommendation letters.

In other business, it was announced that elections are going to cost an additional $4,000 before the end of the year. And the National Student Lobby was refused their request for t-shirts.

Congress Declares Monday 'National Day of Fasting'

By Cindy Lasher

In the 93rd Congress it was resolved by the Senate that Monday, November 24, 1975, be recognized as the "National Day of Fasting." The resolution called for "Americans (to) reevaluate their own life styles and seek to change their habits from overconsumption to conservation."

The resolution continues by stating that "individuals are encouraged to share such saved monies sacrificially with starving people of the world and not to spend more money on articles which increase the gap between the have and have-not peoples of the world."

CAMPUS CONCERN

Several groups on the UCSB campus have expressed their support for the National Day of Fasting on Monday. Leg Council has passed a resolution recognizing the National Fast Day and supporting the collection of monies to go toward alleviating world hunger.

The campus organization Students for Hunger Action Group (SHAG) is calling people to fast and donate the money that they would have spent on food that day to the Community Hunger Appeal of Church World Service.

SHAG President Bob Schminkey stressed that "Fasting is an important process for doing something about world hunger. By fasting we can experience what it really means to be hungry. For most of us this will be the first time we will have gone a full day without eating and experienced the pains that go along with that."

"The Students for Hunger Action Group is asking people to fast on November 24 and to give the money they would have spent on meals to us. We will then channel the money to CROP, the Community Hunger Appeal for Church World Service, for its use in hunger projects all around the world," stated Schminkey.

Another member of SHAG, Debbie McCafferty, is fasting for five days "to raise awareness of what it's like to be hungry." She claims that "During a one day fast it's so easy to go to bed at night and know that you're going to wake up the next morning and have breakfast."

SHAG will have a film and discussion on hunger at St. Marks Church on Sunday, November 23 at 7:30 p.m. On Monday there will be a noon rally at Storke Plaza and slide presentations in the UCen.

UCSB Faces Challenging Season

Barkey Welcomes Back Eight Varsity Players Who Face Ruthless Schedule

By Brian Kelley

Possibly the most exciting season in UCSB basketball history will get under way just one week from tonight. Faced with their most challenging schedule ever, the Gauchos will play no less than five nationally ranked teams.

Coach Ralph Barkey begins his tenth year as head man, and he faces one of the toughest coaching tasks of his career. Although the burden had been lessened by eight varsity returnees, NCAA rule changes and the schedule present problems he had never faced before.

OPEN WITH USE

Next Friday the Gauchos will make their debut on the road against the University of San Francisco Dons. Needless to say, the players and Coach Barkey are growing impatient waiting for opening tipoff.

"We've had poor practices the last three of four days, but I think that is primarily because of the time of the season. We've been going at it for about five weeks now, and we're tired of going against each other. We're anxious for games. It's been a long pre-season, and while it's all necessary, it gets a little antsy at the end."

The Gauchos will certainly have their hands full up north. In fact the entire schedule contains schools that are expecting big years. The team is definitely aware of this. Barkey assures, "They know we've got probably the toughest schedule we've ever played here at this school."

NCAA RULE CHANGE

Some of the biggest games too are at the opposing campuses. To start there is USF, then the invincible Bruins at Westwood followed by North Carolina. Thanks to a new NCAA rule, visiting teams can only carry ten players. Last season the number was thirteen. This troubles Barkey. "That is the biggest dilemma we have. It's probably the biggest problem I've faced in terms of personnel selection in ten years."

Whatever team he does put on the floor, it will be an experienced group and one that knows each other. Barkey emphasizes this point. "I think the players have a good feeling about their club. They are a very close team, and this is a good beginning. I also think they are a confident group. This team believes in itself, and they know what they have to do."

This year's team will have to play with a little different style from the traditional Barkey teams in order to win. The UCSB running game that has been so visible in the past may not be a prevalent this season. The '75-76 Gauchos are not a quick team, and Barkey questions their ability to "get out and fill the lanes effectively."

One thing he is sure about is their ability to hit the boards. Encouraged by play in practice and past experiences, Barkey anticipates rebounding to be a Gaucho asset. He states, "Board play has got to be one of our biggest strengths as indicated by the SC scrimmage." UCSB soundly out-rebounded the Trojans 48-31 earlier this year.

BIG FRONTLINE

Leading the way for the Gauchos will be a tough front line with John Service at center and Ricky "Tex" Walker and Dave Brown as forwards. All three are big and have two years of varsity experience behind them.

Barkey is quick to praise this trio. "We anticipate that our front line is our biggest strength because they are big and physical, and they can really play. This is a group that can score and that is where games are won and lost — in the basket area."

John Service, at 6' 10" 230 lbs., is the Gaucho big man in the middle. Barkey feels Service's play is a key to how well the team will do, and he is confident that Service will do the job.

"We are very pleased with John. This is a big year for him because it is his last. He is much more motivated and mentally into the game than he has ever been. Generally his play throughout practice has been excellent, and if he continues to improve he will have a big year."

WALKER: PREMIER REBOUNDER

Service should have plenty of help though. Junior Tex Walker begins his third year on varsity, and Barkey is especially high on his talents. "Tex's play has improved greatly over the last year. He is more stable and under better control, and when he does this he is just an exceptional player."

Barkey stresses board play and Tex, at a quick 6' 7", excels here. Barkey warns that, "He could be one of the premier rebounders in the country. I think potentially he could be just an explosive board player. If Tex will just let the scoring take care of itself and give us the good defense, and if he keeps on making progress, he is going to have a fine year."

Dave Brown, 6' 6" 215 lbs., will start at the other forward spot, and he adds that characteristic all teams seek — consistency. "Dave is one of the most gifted athletes I have ever coached," praises Barkey. "He has great hands, he is a fine open court passer and all around he is our most complete player."

As the team's leading percentage shooter last season and their second highest scorer, Brown is expected to pick up most of the scoring from the forward spot. Barkey at least hopes so. "He is both good inside and outside, and I am sure he is going to stick his head up and be a very productive player. He has got to have a big year ahead of him."

TWO SOLID SUBS

Backing up and providing excellent talent off the bench will be Jeff Lipscomb and Mark Campanero. The unique aspect of this duo's play is that their styles are different, and this will allow the Gauchos to adjust to many unexpected situations.

Barkey characterizes Lipscomb as a "rugged tough guy on the court who plays a very hard, physical game." Campanero, on the other hand, at 6' 3", provides quickness and driving ability that should create many opportunities on offense.

In the past, Campanero has played both guard and forward, but Barkey has no plans to swing him this year. "Forward is his natural position," Barkey claims. "He is so at home and comfortable there that it certainly is a good thing we moved him down."

Unfortunately for the Gauchos, behind the solid backup of Lipscomb and Campanero lies little else in the way of frontline help. The current five is all Barkey has and an injury or foul trouble could cause serious problems. The refs' whistle has always attracted this group, especially Service, and if a remedy is not found quickly it could make for a long season.

GUARDS STRONG

Depth is certainly not a problem at the guard

GO FOR IT- John Service (32) and Dave Brown (44) go up high to snare a rebound. These two are going to have to do much of the same this season for the Gauchos to be successful.

position. Barkey has no less than six players he can choose from, and each has something unique and necessary to offer. Leading the way are Andy Oliveira, Bobby Turner and Ron McCowan, all members from last year's varsity. Junior college transfer Joe Youman is big for a guard at 6' 4", and Barkey has high aspirations for him.

Overall Barkey has been impressed with his backcourt. "I am very happy with our guard play right now. I think it is going to be pretty solid."

Last season, UCSB's guards were criticized for not contributing enough to the offense. Barkey is not worried about this, and he is confident his backcourt can score. "We will get as much offense as the team needs. I don't feel we have to have a lot of scoring from our backcourt. I would like them to pick up the slack when the need arises."

Barkey has three sophomores, Richard Ridgway, Greg Okada and Jeff Loux, who have tremendous potential. Unfortunately, all play guard. Although none of the trio will probably see much action, they are all capable of filling in and should be the stalwarts of the future.

ANYONE COULD START

As for which Gauchos will start, Barkey is still uncertain. "I don't know who the starters will be right now. If we were to go tonight Oliveira and either Turner or McCowan would get the nod. We thought Joe Youman could start for us, and it's still a definite possibility. He is still adjusting to major college ball and has had a lot of problems picking up what we are trying to do."

No matter who gets the call for the starting spots, it is obvious that all season long there will be constant competition at this position. And that is a healthy situation.

Barkey has returned to the offense he used with Doug Rex three years ago. This is a low post oriented offense and the object is to get the ball into the big men. The players have caught on fast according to Barkey.

"Our new offense is going very well. This team has picked it up and gotten into it extremely well. Our big front line is classically made for the style." When the Gauchos don't set up the break, this is what they will move into.

This seems to indicate that the Gauchos will play a deliberate, methodical game on offense and that leads to a slower, low scoring outcome. Defense, as a result, will play even a bigger part in determining the Gauchos' success.

As with most coaches these days, Barkey finds it hard to emphasize just how important defense is. "Our defense has got to be excellent or we won't have much of a season. We will stick with our good, tough man to man until we are forced out of it. We

Wrestling Invitational Attracts Top Teams, Gauchos Play Host

By Mike Lauderdale

The Gauchos' first home tournament begins at Robertson Gym at 2 p.m. Saturday, and this one should prove to be quite a test for the resurging Gauchos, who will be competing against Cal Poly-SLO, Arizona State and San Jose State.

Cal Poly was eighth in the nation last year. As the Western regional champions, they had a 16-4-0 record with a schedule that included such teams as Cornell, Iowa, Navy, Oklahoma and Oklahoma State. Their lineup includes a pair of California state high school champions (at 118 and 150), two California state JC champions (at 158 and 190) and a third-place finisher in the Western regionals.

Big names include Leon Lannarelli at 126, who was fourth in the nation in NCAA Division II last year; Benje Williams, who has a 505-30-7 career record and is two-time Junior world champ at 134; Kim Wasick at 167, who, as a redshirt last year, won every tournament he entered; and Sythell Thompson, who was second in Western regionals and third in NCAA Division II last year. Obviously, they are a team to be taken very seriously.

DOUGLAS AT ASU

ASU, which was 7-6-1 last year, is also a team to be taken very seriously. Former Gaucho mentor, Bobby Douglas, moved on to ASU and is in the process of building ASU into a national contender. Douglas was a ten-time national champ, was second in the World Games and was on the '64 and '68 US Olympic wrestling squad. His team, although young (seven are freshmen or sophomores), is good enough to give any opponent nightmares. His personnel include a two-time Arizona state high school champ and former high school champions from Oklahoma, Nebraska, and Michigan.

Key personnel are 142-pounder George Espinoza, two-time Junior national champ; 158 pounder John Malie, Indiana high school champion and Junior Olympic champ; 167 pounder Don Shular, last year's JC state champion, and 190 pounder Bruce Young, defending WAC champion.

San Jose State, last year's PCAA champ in spite of an 8-10-1 record, returns six of last year's starters. The Gauchos lost 20-18 to S.J. State last year due to a forfeit. In fact, they lost to all three teams, and these fond old memories should result in some fierce wrestling on the part of the Gauchos.

On Sunday at 2 p.m. the Gauchos go against ASU in a dual meet. This unusual scheduling is due to the fact that ASU will not be returning to California for the rest of the season.

The tournament gets rolling at 2 p.m. and wrestlers will be seeded by last year's records. The wrestling will take place on two mats with first and fourth seeds wrestling on one mat, second and third on the other. Winners will wrestle for the championship and losers will wrestle for third place at 7:30 p.m.

Baskets ...

plan to play a lot of extended defense, and we have guards who do this well."

Because of the foul situation, the Gauchos will also play zone. Barkey related, "If we get some of our big men in trouble, we will have to play zone to protect them. And it's going to have to be an active good zone because we may have to stay in it for extended periods of time."

That is just about what we can look for this season. As with all teams, there are many questions that cannot be answered until games are played. That time is approaching fast. Soon Coach Barkey, the players and we fans will know what the '75-76 Gauchos are made of and whether or not they can overcome many of the challenges they will face throughout this season.

Poloists Meet UCI, Mark Season's End

By Gregg Kantor

UCSB's varsity water polo team will confront the Irvine Anteaters today at 3:00 p.m. in the campus pool.

Coach Dante Dettamanti commented, "Irvine plays a very mechanical water polo game. They don't do anything really fancy, however they execute well." He added, "They are a very physical and extremely fast swimming team."

Because the Gauchos are giving up a lot of speed to the Anteaters, Dettamanti is considering starting some of the faster second string players. Although some of the Gauchos' second stringers possess more speed than the starters, they lack experience.

SPEED NEEDED

Dettamanti explained, "To beat Irvine we're going to have to anticipate where the ball is going and keep control of the ball when we're on offense."

Leading the Irvine team will be Gary Figueroa, who scored five times in the Gaucho's earlier 9-4 loss to the Anteaters. Dettamanti stated, "Figueroa is the quickest and hardest shooter I've seen. He also has a great variety of shots."

Highlighting UCSB is senior Cliff Feaver, who in recent weeks has become the team leader. Dettamanti noted, "Cliff has been playing excellent offense and defense."

Irvine's goalie, Guy Antle, has played on the U.S. National team and a number of their other players were on the Pan American team.

In what has to be considered a rebuilding year, the Gauchos will finish with a record below .500 no matter what today's outcome is. Next year anywhere from fifteen or so players will return to form what could be one of the top teams in the nation.

Today's match against Irvine will be UCSB's last of the season.

Cachuma Lake

Although Welch had been told of the project before he acquired the land, he fought with every conceivable weapon at his disposal. After lobbyists and lawyers failed, he turned on Storke personally. "For pure venom," Storke wrote, "the city and the county had never seen anything equal to it (Welch's campaign)."

Although Welch took his fight against Storke all the way to Washington D.C., Storke's friendships with persons like Senator Carl Hayden, chairman of the Senate Appropriations Committee, then-governor Earl Warren, and Congressman Mike Kirwan, who chaired the House Appropriations Committee, helped pull Cachuma Reservoir through all the legislative hurdles.

At home, the dam was heavily approved by the local constituency. Although it was a major victory for Storke, it was not the end of the tunnel.

Even after construction began in 1950, Storke reported continuing battles for the money every year after that until completion in 1953. Then the wait began to see whether the dry Santa Barbara seasons would ever supply enough water to fill the 205,000 acre-foot basin.

Then, on April 12, 1958, Storke's hard-fought dream became a reality when water finally ran into the spillway. The way was clear for a growing, vital Santa Barbara.

Senator Storke

Illinois in 1912.

After a few minutes of pleasantries, Storke left with these parting words, "Mr. Secretary, I don't mind saying I'm disappointed. Before I was appointed Senator, I used to get a lot of help from Washington. Now that I'm here as Senator, I have to go back home in two weeks empty-handed. I don't know exactly how I'm going to explain this to my constituents back in California."

As Storke recalled, "I thought I (then) detected the faintest glint of a twinkle softening the steely glare of the 'Old Curmudgeon's' eyes."

On Ickes's suggestion, Storke also spoke to the Interior Secretary's assistant. However, the next morning to his great surprise, there lay on his desk a lengthy memo from the Secretary himself.

PROJECTS APPROVED

The message advised Storke that every project except one on his list had been approved. California had been allocated over $10 million to begin numerous projects including three schools in Ventura county, $250,000 for an addition to the Salinas courthouse, $600,000 for a public project in San Diego and items for Shasta, Monterey and various other counties.

The rest of Storke's brief Washington fling passed quickly. On January 3, Senator-elect Sheridan Downey took office and Storke and his wife returned to their California residence in Santa Barbara.

Below the stunning surface are advanced electronics for superb performance (S/N ratio: 58dB). Special features include Dolby Noise Reduction, and operatorless auto recording with a timer. Like every Yamaha component, the TC 800GL is a delight to listen to, look at, touch. It has a perfectly balanced flywheel and precision tape transport mechanism. Capstan roundness and surface evenness tolerances twice as stringent as other manufactures!

Three-Way-Power Versatility

AC line, 12V external source, or batteries in the built-in compartment power the TC-800GL with any of three; use it at home as a part of your stereo system, in your car or boat or as a portable unit for live recording and outdoor listening.

Automatic Recording with Timer

Plug the power cord into your timer, set up for recording and press the Pause switch. When the set time arrives, power to the unit will pop out the Pause switch and recording will begin (AC operation only).

Super-Hard Permalloy Rec/PB Head

In addition to a special material and construction which offers superb durability and extended service life, this head also features excellent sensitivity, an outstanding dynamic range and high signal-to-noise ratio. It is also one of the reasons behind the TC-800GL's ultra-low distortion.

Memory Rewind

Reset the three-digit tape counter to zero and press the Memory button. Then, when you rewind, the tape will stop at 999 to let you begin play at zero. Great for rehearing favorite passages, language study, etc.

Automatic Tape Switchover

For chrome cassettes with the new extra hole, a special sensor automatically switches bias and equalization, matching the tape characteristics. A manual selector lets you switch back and forth between regular cassettes and ferri-chrome (FeCr) types.

Limiter Circuit

Ideal for limiting peak surges during live recording, this circuit compresses signals which threaten to saturate the recording system, thus avoiding clipping and overload used with a high input level setting for automatic level control; ideal for recording speeches, conferences, etc.

Extended-Range Level Meters, LED Peak Indicators

Each meter has an extra-wide range of -40dB to +6dB, for full visual verification of even the most dynamic surges. There are also long-life LED indicators to assure perfect recording control. One indicator Lights for levels above -3dB and the other for levels above +4dB. This is the ideal recording range, so perfect recordings are easy every time.

Full Auto Shutoff

At the end of a tape (recording or Playback) the set automatically shuts off, to protect the capstan and pinch roller against deformation.
