The State

LOS ANGELES — A group of so-called "average persons" have won their battle to block Los Angeles City Hall from razing their homes in the Pico-Hauser area to make way for a park. City Councilman David Cunningham, who represents the area, announced the city will acquire another site about one mile away, at about one-tenth the cost.

LOS ANGELES — Governor Brown says those males who are convinced qualified women cannot be found for key jobs need to have their consciousness raised. He told the National Order of Women Legislators: "There are so many qualified women just waiting for positions, it's very easy to put them in jobs."

SAN DIEGO — A former Marine recruit has told a military hearing he saw flames "the size of a shoe box" on the clothing of another recruit, who allegedly was set afire by a drill instructor.

SACRAMENTO — California's Fair Political Practices Commission has brought suit against Democratic Assemblyman Tom Suitt of Indian Wells. He is accused by the Commission of failure to report the services of a state-paid legislative employee as a contribution to his 1976 re-election campaign. It is the first suit filed against a member of the legislature in the three-year history of the Commission.

SACRAMENTO — The California State Employees Association (CSEA) has told the State Personnel Board it will press for a 12½ percent wage increase next year.

The Nation

WASHINGTON — Chairman Harley Staggers of the House Senate Energy Conference Committee says President Carter would probably accept a proposed compromise, setting national guidelines for electric rates. Carter had asked Congress for mandatory standards.

RALEIGH, NORTH CAROLINA — Anita Strickland says she loves to shop, and she figures she ought to make some money out of it. So she has started a business. For $15 she'll counsel you on what to buy for Christmas. For another fee she'll take your spending money and buy it, keeping you from having to trudge from store to store.

AUGUSTA, GEORGIA — There will be no more Women's Army Corps next year. But Brigadier General Mary Clark says there still will be a place for women in the Army. She said there will be a place in the regular Army as part of the Army's continuing effort to end segregation of sexes.

WASHINGTON — A group of scientists in Washington say federal safety estimates regarding nuclear power plants are far too low, and that thousands could die in reactor accidents by the year 2000. The group recommends that the U.S. not get heavily involved in nuclear power until there are better safeguards.

WASHINGTON — The U.S. told Cuba that the presence of 27,000 Cubans in 16 African countries is going to have an impact on the pace, and even the possibility, of normalizing relations between the two nations.

The World

STUTTGART, WEST GERMANY — Terrorist defense lawyer Klaus Croissant has been taken, under heavy guard, to Stuttgart's maximum-security Stammheim prison. Croissant was returned by France to West Germany to face charges of aiding the Baader-Meinhof group of terrorists. A French court has turned down his request for political asylum.

PRETORIA — A South African lawyer says the story that black activist Steve Biko was on a hunger strike was part of a "cover up." The Biko family's attorney told an inquest into the activist's death that Justice Minister James Kruger may have to be called to give evidence to clear up how the alleged cover-up began. Police witnesses have said Biko was shackled naked for 48 hours during police interrogation.

JERUSALEM — Egyptian President Sadat will travel to Israel in the face of opposition at home and from his Arab allies. In Beirut, Palestinian leader Yasir Arafat condemned the visit and urged Sadat to cancel it. Egypt's Foreign Minister Fahmy, a close aide to Sadat, signaled disapproval of the visit by resigning.

MOGADISHU, SOMALIA — A delegation of U.S. Congressman and military officers arrived yesterday in Somalia, three days after the east African nation expelled its Soviet advisors and broke relations with Cuba. Observers say the Somalia government may ask for U.S. military aid to fill the void left by the Soviet exodus.

Council Alters By-Laws To Clear Way for Salary

By RICH PERLOFF

By a 14-0 vote, with two abstentions, A.S. Legislative Council finally approved the by-law change which resolves their conflict in receiving grants-in-aid.

The desired effect was ultimately achieved by simply changing the word "shall" to the word "may" within the pertinent section of the by-law in question. A.S. representatives are now not in conflict with any existing statutes in receiving their $60 per quarter grants.

A few tempers flared once again during the Finance Board report. The International Relations Organization (I.R.O.), having negotiated for a speaker, agreed to pay him $100, and then went to Finance Board for an allocation of the funds.

Internal President Jeff Loeb commented that the I.R.O. has known "since the beginning of the quarter" that they are supposed to get Finance Board's approval first, then go to Leg Council. Representatives of the I.R.O. informed the council that they had bargained their speaker down to $50 dollars, and the motion to grant the funds ultimately passed by a vote of 8-5. Notably among those in disagreement were Randy Cohen, who has long been outspoken about improper tactics being employed in skirting Finance Board, and Loeb, who intimated that if he were affiliated with a group looking for funds, he would have little regard for Finance Board.

Loeb also proposed that Leg Council form an ad hoc committee to draft a proposal concerning a new set of policies and procedures for A.S. funded groups. This would begin to give Leg Council more (Please turn to p.20, col.3)

Cranston Makes First Campus Visit By U.S. Senator Since Late '60's

By GLENN BRACKETT

Beginning a swing through the Santa Barbara area, U.S. Senator Alan Cranston and State Senator Omer Rains were greeted by an overflowing audience at the UCen Program Lounge yesterday.

Largely a question and answer session by Cranston, the talk opened with Rains warmly introducing Cranston as "a fighter for social justice for over three decades."

Cranston's opening statement focused largely on what he felt would be the Republican's attempt to "knock off" Rains in the upcoming election and what he termed "their desire to detach Isla Vista to a different district where its votes wouldn't count." According to Cranston, the Santa Barbara area is considered very marginal, therefore making the Isla Vista area very upsetting to Republican vote seekers.

Cranston reiterated that because of the history of this area, "the Republicans feel any Democratic candidate extremely

Student Lobby Wins A.S. Budget Battle

By KIM KAVANAGH

In a victory for the UCSB Student Lobby, the A.S. Judicial Council ruled that Leg Council unconstitutionally withheld funds from the lobby for the 1977-78 budget. All A.S. funds will be frozen until the lobby is reimbursed.

The Student Lobby filed a complaint with the Judicial Council on October 28, challenging the Leg Council's budgeting procedures last spring which allocated them $9,301. The Lobby contended that they should have been appropriated $11,407.50.

Instead of receiving two percent of the total revenues of the student fees at $16.25, Leg Council derived the two percent allocation from a $13.25 figure.

The figure was cut by three dollars due to the council's notion that the student lobby was to receive two percent of the original student fees, which at the time were $13.25. Since then, three dollars were added to provide students with free bus (MTD) rides to the campus.

Leg Council argued that the ACUCSB membership fee was unclear, and that the intent of the legal code was to separate the MTD funds from student fees before dividing up the budget.

But the Judicial Council reiterated by stating that the "wording is explicit. There is no need to look at intent."

They went on to quote Supreme Court Justice Holmes, "We ask not what this man meant, but what those words would mean in the mouth of a normal speaker of English using them in the circumstances in which they were used."

UCSB Student Lobby Director Rich Leib said that the monies the lobby receives will be spent primarily on the main Lobby in Sacramento.

"We're going to spend most of the money up North. So far we haven't been giving our share. It will also enable the student lobby on campus to be more active and have more speakers on campus," he said.

The student lobby's argument of financial constraint (lack of funds for UC Student Lobby Sacramento) was thrown out of the court as irrelevant.

The Judicial Council based its decision on Article XII Section 1, p. 29 of the ACUCSB legal code which states that ACUCSB is to "allocate two percent of the total ACUCSB membership fee to the ASCU Student Lobby Program."

According to page one of the ACUCSB Budget summary 11,700 students are enrolled. When multiplied by the annual fees ($48.75) to derive income from fees, you get $570,375. Two percent of this is $11,407.50.

The Judicial Council therefore concluded that the 1977-78 budget allocations were unconstitutional. The opinion read, "Until such time as Leg Council allocates an additional $2106.50 to Student Lobby, no associated students funds are to be further disbursed, except those required under the laws of the State of California, the United States Government, and those required by the bylaws."

vulnerable," causing them to focus much attention on the unseating of Rains. Part of this attention, according to Cranston, is the Republican's hope of detach Isla Vista's votes from the area. He warned, "If we let the Republicans reappropriate their troublesome areas, we could lose many important seats in the house."

Turning to the subject of Jimmy Carter, Cranston praised him as being "highly intelligent, having a great sense of discipline, and possessing an integrity of the very highest." One of the problems Cranston felt that the President was highlighting is his concern for nuclear energy, "Jimmy Carter is very alert to the problem."

According to Cranston, much of the problem that Carter is now having with Congress stems from his demands on the White House staff to meet deadlines. Carter tends to be a tireless worker, Cranston felt, and "his staff is having trouble meeting his deadlines causing some of Carter's finished proposals to seem a little unsure to Congress." Cranston also stated that, because of the misuses of power and the interrupted presidencies since 1960, and what Cranston, at that time, felt could have lead to "a one man dictatorship," Congress is going to "scrutinize Carter very closely." Cranston explained that the Constitution was set up so that Congress is able to check the President very closely and that "we should expect a certain amount of conflict."

Cranston went on to refute what he felt was the much used allegation that "Carter is somehow punishing California" because of his problems securing votes here in 1976. "The President is much too intelligent for that," said Cranston, "and he needs our support too much, which is why he's giving special attention to California." Another reason, according to Cranston, is his post as the Senate Majority Whip, enabling him to meet regularly with the President and get more (Please turn to p.6, col.1)

'A Most Fascinating and Enigmatic Phenomenon'

Sithole Speech Highlights UCSB African Conference

In 1955 Ndabaning: Sithole went to the United States to study theology at the Andover Newton Theological Seminary. He obtained his Bachelor of Divinity three years later, and returned to Rhodesia. In April 1959 he was ordained as a minister of the Methodist Church.

Sithole then combined his ministry with politics. In 1959 he was in the process of setting up branches of the nationalist African National Congress when the government banned the party. The National Democratic Party (NDP) was founded in 1960 under the leadership of Joshua Nkomo, as a successor to the Congress and Sithole was elected Treasurer at the first annual meeting in October 1960. He took part as the party's delegate at the constitutional conference on Southern Rhodesia held in London in December 1960 and in Salisbury in February 1961.

In December 1961 the government banned NDP, citing the violence used by some of its members. Soon afterwards a new nationalist party, the Zimbabwe

African People's Union (ZAPU), was founded with Nkomo as President and Sithole was again a leading office holder, as the Party's National Chairman. In September 1962 ZAPU was proscribed, and Sithole, who was attending a conference in Athens at the time, stayed abroad and settled in Dar es Salaam, Tanzania.

In July 1963 a fight broke out over the leadership in ZAPU, and the dissidents founded a new party, the Zimbabwe African National Union (ZANU), with Sithole as President. Both parties were banned in August 1964 and their leaders detained. From July 1964 the government kept Sithole either in prison, where he was sent for a breach of the Law and Order (Maintenance) Act, in restriction, or in detention.

Already in detention Sithole was tried in February 1969 by the Rhodesian High Court and found guilty of an alleged Rhodesian Cabinet Ministers, including Prime Minister Ian Smith. He was sentenced to six years hard labor. He was released from prison in December 1974 along with other leading nationalists (as part of the "detente" exercise then underway in Southern Africa), including Nkomo and Robert Mugabe, now joint leaders of the Patriotic Front, the umbrella organization of the guerrilla forces waging warfare against the Smith regime from bases located inside Rhodesia and also in Mozambique, Zambia and Botswana.

Under the Unity Agreement reached at the Lusaka Summit in December, 1974 (convened by Zambian President Kenneth Kaunda, President Julius Nyerere of Tanzania and Sir Seretse Khama of Botswana), Sithole joined with the leaders of ZAPU (Joshua Nkomo), the front for the Liberation of Zimbabwe (FROLIZI, Robert Chikerema) and the African National Council (ANC, Bishop Abel Muzorewa) to work together to achieve majority rule in Rhodesia. They united under the enlarged ANC with Bishop Muzorewa as President.

Sithole was briefly detained in March 1975 following accusations by the Rhodesian Government that he planned to murder his colleagues in the United African National Council and then assume supreme leadership of the nationalist movement. After a storm of domestic and international protest, he was released, ostensibly so that he could attend an extraordinary meeting of Foreign Ministers of member states of the Organization of African Unity in Dar es Salaam.

Sensing a Need for Dog Care

Editor, Daily Nexus:

Anyone who has been in Isla Vista or has stood within nasal sensory distance of the community is undoubtedly aware of one problem caused by some dog owners' irresponsibility. Those of us living here are aware of many more such problems. Some dogs are running in packs, many are unclean, and a surprising number are improperly fed. Dogs running free in Isla Vista are creating an unhealthy and displeasing atmosphere for many residents, and while a leashlaw survey was taken in our recent election, I sense a need for more direct action.

A leashlaw does exist in Isla Vista, and steps should be taken to enforce it. The point is not to get rid of the animals, but to compel their owners to respect the welfare of their neighbors and their pets' well-being. Although I love dogs, I have grown quite weary of losing pizza slices and sandwiches to alleged "best friends" in the park.

Various agencies have approached this issue before, but without support from residents (visual support, that is), success has been out of reach. That's right, here's the catch: the buck stops at the County Board of Supervisors, and I am urging all interested persons to invest thirteen cents and a little time to express your dissatisfaction. By ignoring the leashlaw, the Board is condoning neglect for County statutes; an unusual stand for elected officials. A large student and community response will be more beneficial than you might imagine. I am going before the Board to present this issue next week, and a barrage of letters will be a tremendous support.

Letters should be addressed to the Santa Barbara County Board of Supervisors, 105 East Anapamu Street, Santa Barbara, California.

Two Views on Parking

Editor, Daily Nexus:

Recently I returned from surfing at Campus Point to find a five dollar parking ticket under my windshield wiper. It seems I wasn't parked in the lot that I had been assigned to. You see, I was parked in the lot closest to Campus Point and the policy of parking attendants is to assign surfers to a lot miles from the point. This is ridiculous.

I pay fifty cents for the privilege to drive on campus. This definitely is a privilege since even though I am a student at UCSB I have been forced to turn around at the gate before when the attendant saw my wetsuit and board. Why is it the policy for parking attendants to discriminate against surfers?

Mike Allen

Editor, Daily Nexus:

Although I sympathize with the beach-goers ticketed for parking at More Mesa, I am pleased with the new ordinance for a different reason — it prohibits motorcycle riding in vacant fields. I long for a Saturday when I and my neighbors on Ellwood Beach Drive will not be awakened by the whine of a dirt-bike or forced to traverse a race course on the way to the beach. Hopefully, the threat of a $50 fine will encourage those who like to "do it in the dirt" to use authorized tracks and quit ripping up the area's open fields.

Direction Needed From A.S. Director

By Seth R. Freeman

When I was on Legislative Council last year, not really that long ago, major efforts were taken to compel some measure of responsiveness from the A.S. Executive Director's office. Realizing during budget sessions the Spring before that we were paying someone over $13,000 to be our top administrator made us wonder what he did for the Council.

Former Vice-President Paul Pooley and I designed some internal policies that were to give us a greater idea of what Robert Lorden really did for the Leg Council. Our policies were really quite simple. All mail was to be received by the A.S. Office so that officers could have first glance at pertinent correspondence. Items that pertained only to Mr. Lorden were transferred unopened to him. Also we requested copies of correspondence that pertained to the Council but were routed directly to the Executive Director's office by mistake.

In addition, we requested some kind of time break-down report, the sort that all employees usually provide to their superiors, and simple memos of telephone calls pertaining to the Associated Students, a practice quite common in any organization. All these things were to be accumulated in a green folder prominently placed on the secretary's desk so that all interested officers and even students could readily assess the operations of Robert Lorden's office. We wanted to see exactly what our half-time Director was doing.

Well I went up to the A.S. office yesterday to see what kind of work load the Executive director has been faced with. Not surprisingly, the last piece of correspondence was from mid-September, regarding the death of a student on his way to participate in the Capitol Hill program. Nowhere was there any indication that A.S. business had occurred through the Director's office. Or is it simply that he has been so busy he forgot about more than three meetings he participated in to initiate the procedures I described?

Students, all of us are paying a salary for an officer we know hardly anything about. Further we are helping to support the UCen's Accounting and Cashiering operations without any real idea how effectively our money is being spent.

Mr. Pooley and I worked diligently to ensure that incoming student officers could make themselves aware of the type of essential business the Executive Director's office takes care of. What we initiated, we thought institutionalized, was a system in which student officers could involve themselves in the relatively unstable internal operations of the Association.

We felt that if our leaders could tighten the loose strings in the A.S. infra-structure, productive and efficient external programs and innovations would come about.

I will assert that our new Leg Council members have little idea what kinds of duties the Executive Director actually performs for them. I will further assert that there is no way to even begin measuring the effectiveness of that office simply because there are no back-up or supportive materials that would firmly indicate allotment of time to various duties that affect the operations of the Associated Students.

By ignoring the policies initiated by Mr. Pooley and I, I am led to believe that Mr. Lorden has a very limited interest in availing students and their leaders to the very complicated administrative tasks of running a million dollar operation. Perhaps Mr. Lorden feels some secrecy is advantageous. But to those paying A.S. fees and indeed to his superiors, the Leg Council, there is a vested interest in knowing exactly what our $13,000 administrator does for his money.

I invite Mr. Lorden to comment in these pages on how students and Leg Council can be best educated, and more simply, than by following the standard operating policies that we initiated last year. Perhaps if policies such as these were enforced year-to-year, new council members would not need to spend six of their nine month tenure figuring out what is wrong in the internal structure. How can Mr. Lorden so easily ignore executive directives and expect the students he serves to have sufficient faith in his conduct and handling of "all business activities" of our Associated Students?

DROP OFF AT A.S. OFFICE 3RD FLOOR OF THE UCEN

Cranston at UCSB

attention focused on California than usual. Cranston then sighted that, "Unemployment in California is now lower than the rest of the nation."

Although Cranston felt that Governor Jerry Brown and President Carter "Have a good relationship, they are still watching each other closely as 1980 approaches." Also much of their supposed conflicts are media created, with a little help from the Republicans, Cranston added.

Cranston drew laughs from the crowd when he said that if an intense Brown-Carter rivalry does develop in 1980, "I'll make sure that I'm extra busy working on my own senatorial re-election campaign."

The question and answer period opened with an inquiry into Cranston's relationship with California's newly elected Republican Senator S.I. Hayakawa to which Cranston drew an immediate parallel to "the Odd Couple."

Cranston stated that they do manage to vote together more than half the time in which they are usually on the winning side 97 percent of the time.

"When we do vote opposite ways I'm pleased to say I win 68 percent of the time," Cranston stated. Not resisting to take a few gentle jibes at Hayakawa, Cranston said that "I've never actually seen him sleeping," referring to the Republican senator's reported tendency to snooze during meetings.

A serious division in views between Hayakawa and Cranston is the creation of the Redwood Park, in which Cranston is working hard for, and he says that "we will get it." Cranston was delighted though, at Hayakawa's support of the Panama Canal Treaty, another objective Cranston wants completed.

When questioned about Carter's commitment to the Middle East, Cranston stated, "Carter's shown a lot of courage," referring to his attempt to form a problem-solving partnership with the Soviet Union. Calling Egyptian President Sadat's visit to the Israeli parliament "a major step," Cranston praised Carter's ability to deal more openly with Arab leaders. But he warned, "We must be careful not to hurt Israel either." According to Cranston we can't tell completely how effective Carter will be in the Middle East "until we have seen the bottom line."

Commenting on Carter's controversial human rights stand, Cranston said that Carter is becoming a little more careful of "how strongly he points a finger" since he offended the Soviet Union at the beginning of his term cooling U.S.-Soviet relations.

Cranston related that when President Carter meets with foreign diplomats "they usually bring up the question of human rights first by expressing a genuine concern." But they warn Carter to keep his finger-pointing to a minimum. Cranston feels that Carter's human rights stand has been effective in some ways.

For example, "The Soviet Union has let more Jews immigrate to Israel than ever before" and "Chile has done away with their much feared secret police." Even more encouraging to Cranston is the news of the circulation of various human rights literature, authored by Carter and himself, through Philipino prisons.

Cranston concluded his talk by answering a "What ever happened to John Tunney?" question. The Senator replied, "Although Tunney was a very capable and able senator, he had lost touch with the people of California."

Most Fascinating...

Instead of going back home to be redetained, he remained outside the country and shuttled between Dar es Salaam, Lusaka-based Zimbabwe Liberation Council, then the external wing of the UANC. Sithole remained outside until July 1977 when he returned home to lead his own wing of the UANC. Although his leadership of ZANU has been disputed by Robert Mugabe since 1975, he remains a dominant figure in the African nationalist movement and is a leading contender for President of an independent Zimbabwe.

A brilliant intellectual and a shrewd political organizer and manipulator, Sithole is propelled by a sense of personal destiny perhaps unparalleled in Zimbabwean nationalist politics. Greatly admired by the African intellectual elite and courted by the business community in his country, he has continuously demonstrated an unusual ability to overcome one obstacle after another, often to the utter amazement of both his baffled competitors and detractors.

His multi-faceted political career, spanning over a period of twenty years, remains one of the most fascinating as well as enigmatic phenomena of contemporary African nationalism.

IVMAC Correction

The story on the Grand Jury investigation of the IV-MAC audit mistakenly stated that all four of the questioned checks were signed by former bookkeeper Frank Chabrow.

All IV-MAC checks require two signatures. Chabrow signed two of the checks. David Strayhorn, former administrative analyst for IV-MAC, signed all four checks. The second signature on the other two checks was that of Deanna Affleck, who is not being investigated.

The Grand Jury is investigating the "questionable appropriation" of $700 discovered in an audit of the IV-MAC. The funds were part of a $20,659 contract held by the IV-MAC for the administration of CETA programs.

Capers

Capers in oil
was the dish we dined,
Sheila and I.

Sheila was almost round
from above black pebbles
to her flat, hidden eyes,
and I liked to say,
"you're not even wicked, Sheila Dimone."

I can't cry. I wonder why.

—Gordon Van Zak

In a middle valley
of the Sierra Nevada
a grove of redwood stands.
Spanish settlers called it Mariposa and prized the wood,
smooth grained and strong.

Centuries grown to height
these red giants tower in the hot sky austere in a drought season.
Brush and small pines
choke the shallow roots,
wind scorches from the arid plateau.

Lightning spark
jumps the gap
from black cloud to tree,
dry leaves fuse
on the outstretched limbs;
a crown fire burns
on the blasted tower.

Mariposa

Falling embers
ignite the profuse tangle
of scrub and thicket.
Orange flames edge the trees
charring the red bark,
a purifying torrent
rushing between the thick trunks.

Swarming in Spring,
Monarch butterflies slant through light
pouring among the Sequoia circling around tree shafts orange clouds eddy furiously black edged wings beat soft against the furrowed bark.

The last motes of wing dust
settle with evening
in the calm forest;
fallen cones lie on black soil.

—Wade Hampton

Hawk

This young brown one
Knew he must go.
The thousand framework houses
Cast crossed shadows on the grasses.
He flew, not away, to a shrinking green of mountain,
But to the darker stinking beast-heart,
The dog stained alley,
Wire webbed air—
To the Manplace.

He waits in the window ledge
Of a concrete cliff.
Bread crumb pecking pigeons
Fatten in the park.
A bird shrieks. The feathered blur snatches
And lifts in a moment, talon sharp,
Forgotten fears of bent beaks.
Secretaries and others, eating their bag lunches,
Howl at the violence and
Bare hidden cat teeth
At the shadow in the sky.

—David Hodges

Sketch: The Lot

By Tim Van Schmidt

The morning was frozen and cold and the air was thin and sharp. Everything about the morning was full of needles; the bits of sun that teased the skin, the scrape of rough cloth over raw necks, the smell of the burning weeds. Everyone was on the road leading out of the village. No one was speaking, no one singing or giving orders, but moving slowly together in the cold pain of the morning.

Passing the last house before the bleak frontier, one could hear the crackling and snapping of the fire that slowly tongues its beams and supporting frame. The walls were black mounds and the tables and chairs that had once stood in a living room were buried underneath the fallen rubble of the ceiling. Small clumps of frozen dirt crunched under the feet of the survivors leaving the village. The people breathed heavily with each step in the scant air and they turned their heads as they passed the white gate of the house that leaned to one side, swinging by only one twisted hinge. The old man lay in the gateway, his blood iced brown and his mouth bulging with fingers, his own fingers. The men looked stern, keeping their eyes straight in front of them while someone behind cried and screamed.

"Father, the world has been set upon me and I feel its cold and fire."

The villagers had gone a long way through the bite of the day and they mostly walked on silently except for an occasional cry or a sob that seemed only to interrupt the brooding silence. Once, a woman cried out from the column's rear, feeling a sudden pain. She was with child and had been hidden by the others with the children in an outlying cellar, away from that violence. She huffed in and out rapidly and was taken by two women in black scarves behind some thin sticks of trees to the side of the road.

The woman gripped a low branch and leaned back with her legs spread, pushing, pushing a child from her warmth. Soon she lay back sweating as one of the women bathed the child and the other woman attended her, carefully washing and stroking her black hair. The refugees from the charred village watched all of this anxiously from the road.

Soon the women returned, one of the women's scarves missing, wrapped around the new baby. The mother walked to a man standing near the front of the column. She bowed her head a moment and then offered the man his son. The man softly uncovered the baby's face and ran his finger along the tender red forehead. He let out a long breath, giving the boy back to his wife, stroking her cheek for a moment.

The mother fumbled with the folds of her dull homespun robe and gently gave her son her breast. The baby reached for his mother's safe body and his father turned from them and started walking down the road, looking straight ahead, saying nothing. One old man standing close by looked at the little boy suckling the mother's breast and let out a scream of frustration. He yelled "Pogrom! Pogrom! Pogrom!" shaking at the way things must continue for those who are born into their family. He cried and cursed and the father walked on, the others following him, the baby drinking his mother's milk, knowing nothing about that sorrow.

Toward a Definition

TOWARD A DEFINITION

By Gary Smith

—Where did you get the paper? she said.

—The book store, there's not much floor space, do you think there's room?

—It's your idea, I don't know, I'm not very big. He spread out the paper on the floor. There was more than enough space between the window and the bed.

—What did you wear?

—My swim suit, you've never seen me in a swim suit.

She took off her shirt and pants and lay down on the paper, moving on it to find a position that she liked.

—What makes you want to do this?

He reached over to the nightstand. He had brought three crayons with him; blue, tan, and red.

—I wanted to do something, I don't know how this came to me.

He tore the paper from the crayons and laid them on the bed. He knelt down beside her on the floor. She had settled into a position. She lay on her back, leaning to her right side, with her right leg drawn up slightly and both arms in front of her.

—Is this what you want? he said.

—Does it look good?

—You look very pretty in a swim suit, he said. He looked at her for a long time.

He took the tan crayon and outlined her body on the paper. He was very careful to get all the contours.

He checked the outline twice while she still lay on the paper.

—It looks good, he careful not to smudge it as you get up.

She rose up very carefully and sat next to him on the bed.

—I look like that?

—A little, I haven't finished yet.

He took the blue crayon and knelt down beside the outlined figure. He positioned his hand on the head of the figure, where the eyes would be. He outlined his hand.

He reached up onto the bed and took the tan crayon again. He carefully drew outlines of his hands, switching right and left, over the rest of the figure, except that part of the torso where the heart would be.

—Is this just a fantasy of yours? I'm a little embarrassed.

—Come down here, I need your help, get that other crayon.

She took the red crayon and knelt down next to him. He took it from her and then placed one of her hands on the blank space of the figure. He outlined her hand in red.

—The left one too, he said.

He outlined her left hand on top of the outline of her right hand.

—Michael, she said.

—I brought scissors, there, on the nightstand.

She reached up and took the scissors and gave them to him, then she sat on the bed. He cut out the figure. It took a long time to do because he was careful to cut just inside the original crayon outline.

When he was through cutting he laid the scissors on the floor. He took the rest of the paper and put it into the waste basket. He sat on the bed and put his arm around her. The figure lay on the floor, oriented the same as she had been.

—Well? he said.

There was a long silence before she spoke.

—Is that how you see me, with my hands hiding my heart? she said. Her voice was very soft.

He stood up and stepped to the figure. She got up and stood next to him.

—I think that's what it's like to be a woman, you're always trying to protect yourself from something.

—It looks like those chalk lines they mark around dead people, I want to throw it away.

—It was just something I wanted to do, I felt artistic, that's all, he said. He wanted to apologize.

She knelt down and crumpled up the figure. She put it into the waste basket.

He went over to her and put his arms around her.

—I didn't mean for it to upset you, he said.

—I'm not upset, she said. She did not look at him as she spoke.

He undid the top half of her swim suit and let it fall to the floor. He pushed the bottom half off her hips. She reached down and pushed it past her knees, then she moved her legs to bring it down the rest of the way.

—I just didn't like to see that figure on the floor like that, my figure like that, she said. She spoke in the broken grammar of someone near tears.

He pressed her close to him and then released her so that he could take off his clothes. She went over and sat on the bed.

He crossed over the room and turned off the light, then he went to the bed. She was still sitting. He sat down next to her and kissed her on the mouth. He kept kissing her as he pushed her down onto the bed.

He moved on top of her. He put his arms underneath her and held her body close to him, so that when he arched or rolled she would move with him. Her breath was shallow and her head was tilted back. He stretched out his right hand and supported her head with it. She shuddered and then was still. He came a few moments after that.

She lay next to him for a short while, then she got up and stared over to where her swim suit was. As she made her first step her foot came down on the scissors.

She moaned.

—Did you hurt yourself?

—No.

She picked up the scissors and looked at them.

—Don't put on your clothes yet darling, he said. I really want you tonight.

—Yes, she said. She kept looking at the scissors in her hand. The closed blades pointed upward and the handle loops hung down. She looked over to the waste basket.

—Yes, she said. She tossed the scissors over near the waste basket and then went back to him in the bed.

The frozen earth of the Ukraine is black.
In a month it will run with rivers.
Leaping in the grey skywater.

Then the morning day will come
And pale wheat will start to grow;
Shy without its clover fan ~
Perfumed, and dear.

Rabbits will be running then;
Chickens will be white and clouds will disappear.

Windbreaks will grow strong
Before the breathless Sun;
Strong beneath the starlings;
Strong in June.

August will be hot
And oxen will sound
And ox-cart wheels.
Motors will burn blue
And the sky will turn wan in the heat.
The land will be brown.

At four o'clock the moon will show
But later, it won't be out 'til eight.

The onions will be fat and gold
But the wheat will be gone.

The ground will be littered
With hay and footprints
And snow.

The owls will fly,
And snow.

The Great Wall

Is thin as the lense of my eye.
Thick as skin
Wrapped taut round the muscle and bone
Of my hand.

Against the stones I rest my cheek
And listen:
A dog barks
Small girls whisper secrets in bushes
You, upstairs, begin to scream.
I nestle closer to the wall
And hear my father yelling
Across summer at my mother
Till they both grow quiet and wonder
Where I am.

—David Hodges

Nothing Promised That Is Not Performed

My father committed suicide
And I touched his cold nose with my cheek.

Wanted to drive a cab.
Please anything
Except next Monday.
Couldn't bear it.
Needed escape;
No more please.

Why was I so selfish?
Just a kiss.
Anything.
Happier perhaps.

Vicki is coming today;
We do need God.

Mother and Jane Killam have tried to limit ...
How he died.
But the cat is more or less
Out of the bag.
So be it.
It was meant to be.
No one paid him any attention;
He was dead
Before he put the hose in the car.

I've a vision of Shakespeare in a golden valley with high mountains to be explored, explained.
The poet's beard blooms like Persian thoughts on shafts of light: strength growing not like Samson's from scalp to pediment, but down from chin to heart.

He sees the sun a gold yolk in the sky threatened by white and clouds.

He sees human shells and shadows beneath that cackle revenge, then leave him; they go into darkness.

He moves on.

Stooping down, he beckons that I

jump flight from his knee

over suspicious clouds blocking my sight:

for the mountains are pleats of bedding

cloaking loving sweethearts and their streams speak warm breath;

the sun is gold that cannot be seen from low.

Shakespeare tells me to speak loudly his words that, like water, do cascade and jemble, jemble to the soul.

Speak the speeches, he says,

to understand, to feel, using teeth and tongue.

But I, fearing shells and Delilah, lose my chance at twenty to see from above,

refuse his knee and waste his sentences

in reading silently and soft.

What light?

Only the sun contends with growing clouds.

Shakespeare rises and bows,

as the moving vision, having come, moves on.

And I go off in darkness, whispering fear.

—Gordon Van Zak

FOR E'LYSE

Mold to me, little one.

Fill the shifting spaces of my boney flesh as you lick and peck your way to my blood-rushed soul.

Feel our sober bodies ravaged with the drink
the wickedness and splendor of a liquid embrace.

Pores wet my skin with their tears and make me unconscious to all but the noble sliding of my loved one's kiss.

Let us be so weightless,

let us be so fierce

that we prance so lightly on the world's quicksand;

be royal seagulls on the water and savage hunters on the land.

The Cavalier

A fourth night in this house?
It rains, out upon it.
We might have kept warmer sheets
A night or two,
Watch morning approach
Shyly at the window
Or scoured the pantry by midnight,
By candle light for wine and cheese.
A deep rug before the fireplace
And fourteen steps, I counted, Upstairs. . .

A siren cried last night,
A fury borne out of Tartarus,
From some mischance or trespass
On the highway North;
Your eyelids flickered,
You lifted the cover with unseen hands,
Sighed deeply, unheeding.
And I could whisper
Softly into your ear
Something in all sincerity. . .
But it rains, out upon it;
And the siren cries on.

Cash for Ideas on Energy, Water Saving

The UCSB Conservation Council has adopted an "Energy, Water Conservation Suggestion Program" in order to solicit suggestions from the campus to eliminate the waste of these resources.

During the next four calendar quarters, beginning last Oct. 1, the Conservation Council will award up to $250 for the most outstanding suggestion submitted during each quarter.

Special forms are now available on which to submit ideas for conservation of energy or water. They are available at: Public Information Office, Administration 1008.

Student Information Center, South Hall 1417.

UCen, Director's Office, UCen 2264.

Dean of Student Residents, Bldg. 335.

Personnel Office, South Hall 1609.

The completed forms should be sent to the Personnel Office, 1609 South Hall.

At the end of each quarter the cash award will be given to the outstanding idea selected from those submitted during the quarter and which were adopted for implementation. Call the energy hotline for information — 961-2287.

Kress Foundation Grant Awarded to Art Dept.

The UCSB Department of Art has been included in the Samuel H. Kress Foundation's program of awards to distinguished graduate programs in art history.

Under the Kress Foundation Fellowship grant, the graduate program in art history will receive $12,500 per year for five years. The major area of support will be fellowships and grants-in-aid to advanced Ph.D. candidates for research and dissertation work here and in Europe.

Established by Samuel H. Kress in 1929, the foundation is internationally known for its support of university programs in art history, the development of museum collections throughout the U.S., the support of scholarly

Africa Conference Now in Session

An international conference on "Colonial Education and Contemporary Conflict in Southern Africa: the African and African-American Perspectives" continues on campus today and tomorrow.

Most panels will be located in the UCen program lounge. Contact the Center for Black Studies, South Hall, Rm. 3703, for a program and details.

In conjunction with the conference, veteran African national Ndabaningi Sithole of Zimbabwe (Rhodesia) will give a free public lecture on current developments in his home country and southern Africa Saturday noon in Lotte Lehmann Hall.

Dr. Slochower Featured on TV

The television program "Focus on UCSB" centers on a distinguished visitor to UCSB; Dr. Harry Slochower, airing at 9:30 p.m. Monday on cable 2 television.

He will be interviewed by Professor Walter Capps, director of the Institute of Religious Studies, and by Associate Professor Ursula Mahlendorf of the Department of German and Slavic Languages.

Dr. Slochower is editor-in-chief of "American Imago," a psychoanalytic journal for culture, science and the arts which was founded by Freud in 1938 as a successor to his Austrian journal of that name. In addition, Slochower is author of "Three Ways of Modern Man," "No Voice is Wholly Lost: Literature and Philosophy Between the Two World Wars," and "Mythopoeisis: Mythic Patterns in the Literary Classics."

Described by Dr. Mahlendorf as "engaging and witty as well as scholarly," Dr. Slochower was a personal friend of Ernst Bloch, knew Thomas Mann and carried on a celebrated correspondence with him, and included among his acquaintances Brecht and a host of other exiled writers.

He is in Santa Barbara as the honored guest and participant in a two-day seminar called "The Creative Process in Art and Literature." Dr. Slochower was a lecture on the topic "Art and Revolution" at 3 p.m.

Das ist gut:

German Leads to Job Opportunities

With the popularity of the German language climbing rapidly in a number of countries as a business and international tongue, university students emphasizing this language can parlay a good education into a marketable skill.

So says Prof. Gunter Gottschalk, chairman of the UCSB department of Germanic and Slavic languages and literatures, who calls attention to a recent article linking the worldwide interest in German with the economic stability of the German-speaking countries.

According to the German Tribune, a weekly review of the German press, "German has now won the status of official language for itself in ten important international organizations" and is the language of every fifth book published in Europe, every tenth in the world.

An undergraduate emphasis now being implemented by the UCSB department of Germanic and Slavic languages and literatures will be good preparation for several careers in which proficiency in German is important, Dr. Gottschalk said.

Stressing language skills and the civilization of German-speaking countries — the two Germanies, Austria, and Switzerland —, the program will be in operation by the winter quarter.

A good "game plan" for career-minded students, the professor of German said, would be to combine undergraduate work in foreign languages with another specialization outside of foreign languages and follow this up with the postgraduate translator-interpreter certificate program in German. This program is recommended as preparation for entering international business firms, government, overseas teaching, organizational committees for Olympic Games, and such international agencies as the United Nations.

To gain a competitive edge, Dr. Gottschalk suggests becoming proficient in one or even two additional languages and entering additional translator-interpreter programs. UCSB offers these programs in French and Spanish as well as German.

A requirement for employment as a translator or interpreter in the United Nations, he notes, is proficiency in three of the following languages: Arabic, Chinese, English, French, Spanish and Russian. All of these languages are taught at UCSB.

Students looking beyond commencement day are invited to consult the German and Russian department's Career Library — the first of its type at UCSB designed specifically for foreign language students. The library, which will be updated constantly, is stocked with recent bulletins and other printed information on jobs requiring a foreign language background.

Planners of this new library hope to work in close cooperation with the campus Counseling Center and with other foreign language departments. It was funded by a grant from UC's instructional development program.

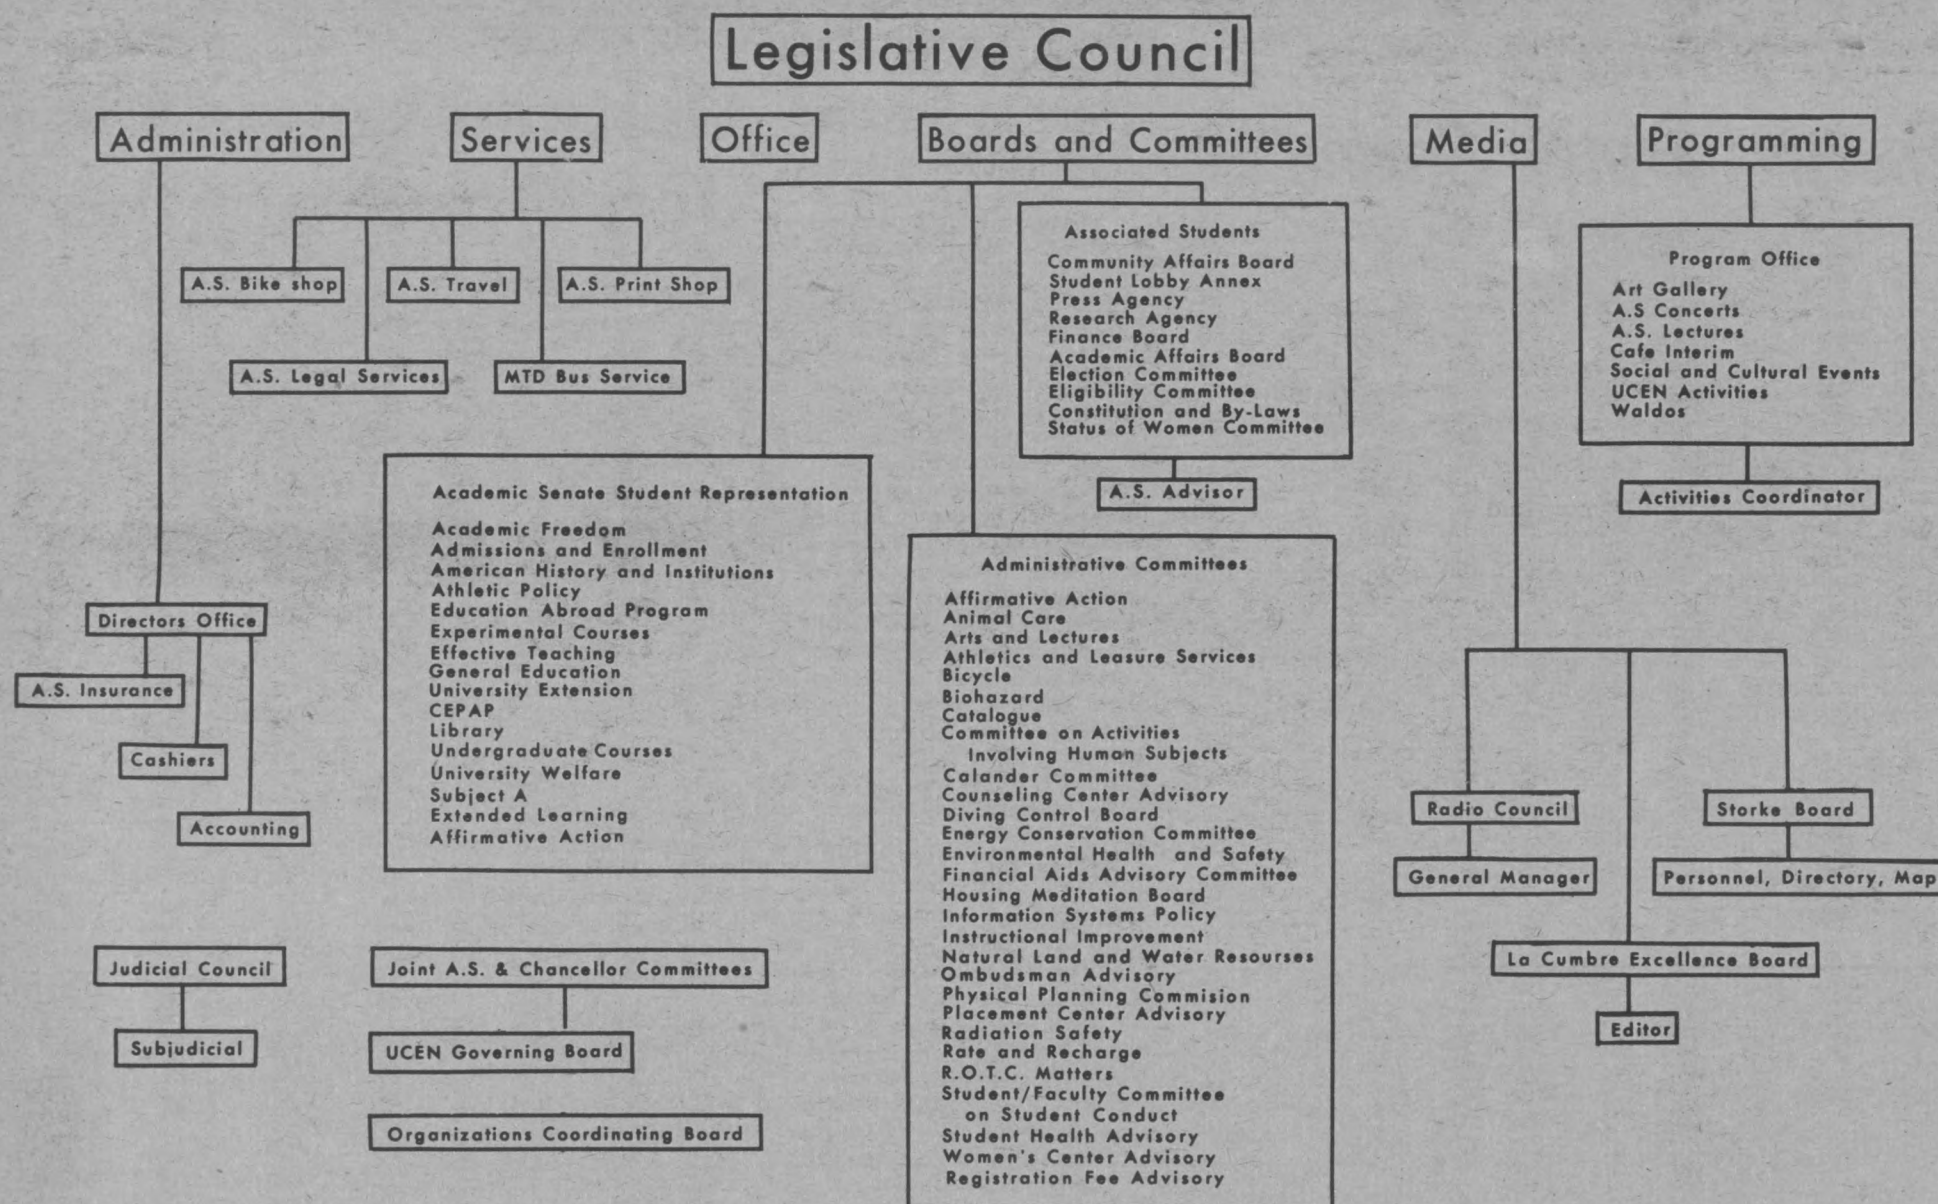

At the present it contains material on careers in travel and tourist agencies, international chambers of commerce, foreign language publications printed in this country, departments of the federal government, overseas teaching, diplomacy, the Defense Language Institute, American firms operating in foreign countries, communications, Peace Corps, Voice of America, U.S. Information Agency, UNESCO, Pan American Airlines, international banking and marketing, library science, import-export and international public relations.

"Academic institutions must realize that earning a living is a major concern of students," the department chairman said. "Proportionately few undergraduate students become teachers or scholars; most enter the commercial world.

"If we can offer them an education which enriches their intellectual and cultural lives and at the same time assists them in preparing for a career, then, I believe, we should do so," he concludes.

The above chart outlines the breadth of Associated Students. Contrary to popular belief, A.S. is not just Legislative Council. Six areas are included under the auspices of Leg Council. They are: the A.S. administration, the student services A.S.

provides, the office itself and its resources, the official A.S. Boards and committees, the media and publications, and programming. Because of its diversity, students of all interests find an outlet through Associated Student government.

Rep's Report: Onward to Point B

By WALTER SADLER
At-Large Representative

Perhaps four years of academia has numbed my brain to reality, but I believe that one of the fundamental problems with Legislative Council lies on a philosophical plane. Specifically, I have noticed during my term on council that there is no theoretical notion of what role the council should play in student affairs. Often it seems that the council has withered into another bureaucratic hurdle for progress rather than a catalyst for constructive change. I believe council should gear itself more towards reaching out to the students, devoting more energy to explaining what the Associated Students has to offer and what can be gained.

As the "supreme governing body of the Associated Students," I believe the council's duties should transcend the passive bureaucratic function of deliberating over procedural matters; it should serve as an instrument for crystalizing student views and promoting student interests.

In terms of funding, visibility, staff, equipment, student involvement and channels of communication to the administration and our legislators, the resources that council possesses are of such enormity that it only seems logical that council should be the spearhead for action. However, in the past, council has failed miserably to coordinate student involvement with its valuable resources. In large part I feel this is due to council's failure to define its duties.

Council needs to take on a new and creative leadership position by developing constructive goals and implementing them with student support. The problem with council has been that it has failed to develop any goals, and more importantly it has not understood the importance of its role in developing student support. The students need to be informed that council is undertaking progressive action and that we need their help.

Basically this involves increased communication. Greater communication between students and elected representatives is a major goal of many people involved in the Associated Students this year. It is also my number one priority. Currently I am coordinating a speaking tour by representatives to dorm hall meetings, and later to A.S. student group meetings. By doing this I hope to let the students know what services A.S. offers, learn what problems are on their minds, and encourage their involvement.

Hopefully the upcoming efforts at communication will both facilitate greater student understanding of the Associated Students and help A.S. government by helping it determine its theoretical role with the students.

Students Do Influence Academic Policy

Contrary to popular belief, students do indeed have a voice in academic decision-making at UCSB. Through the aegis of the Academic Senate Advisory Board, students are represented on 15 of the 26 Academic Senate committees.

The Santa Barbara Division of the Academic Senate is that body which authorizes and supervises all courses of instruction and curricula, as well as advises the Administration on the allocation of academic resources.

Students began participating in Academic Senate committees in 1967. Since then, the number of areas in which students are welcome has expanded commensurately with the addition of new committees. At the present time, the only major committee on which students as yet still have no voice is Academic Personnel, which makes recommendations to the Chancellor regarding academic appointments, i.e. tenure.

Currently, students sit on Academic Freedom, Admissions and Enrollment, Affirmative Action (a new committee), American History and Institutions, Athletic Policy, Educational Policy and Academic Planning, EAP, Effective Teaching, Experimental Courses, Extended Learning, General Education, Library, Subject A, Undergraduate Courses and University Welfare.

Although not all of the committees meet with the same frequency, Educational Policy and Academic Planning (CEPAP) in particular has been effective in representing students' concerns for over ten years through viable participation by qualified students, according to an individual from the Academic Senate Office. The Academic Grievance Procedure, published last Spring, is a good example of an area where students via the Academic Affairs Board have been instrumental in improving the quality of the educational environment.

Furthermore, some other areas in which students have played a large role are: the elimination of the forty-five dollar fee for Subject A, creation of a confidentiality form to protect one's right to privacy when checking out books from the Library, and opposition to the rolled-back drop-date.

Students do have the means to address most of the major issues affecting their education; Academic Affairs Board is the sole official voice for students to offer their opinions on critical educational questions. By means of continued maintenance of the good rapport between the organization and both the Administration and the Academic Senate, students possess a unique advantage on this campus. In a nutshell, they have credibility, built up over more than a decade.

However, the issues become increasingly complex each year, due to the immense growth in information, and the ponderous plodding that occurs in so many committee meetings. Many a faculty member will indicate the freshness and the invigorating approach of students on a committee. It's a great opportunity.

John Kluzek, chairman of the Academic Affairs Board, stated: "We hope to increase communication between all segments of the academic community. If students want change, organization and achievement, they must provide us with their opinion, in order for us to do our job. We seek dedicated, sincere, energetic and innovative people." Certainly, these qualities carry over into every aspect of one's life.

Do you care about your education? Are you concerned enough to invest a few hours a week to improve instruction here at UCSB? Is so, the Academic Affairs Board office is open every day between 10 a.m. and 2 p.m. in UCEN 2275. The phone is 961-4158.

Cagers Begin Year Tonight Against Australian Nationals

By RICHARD BORNSTEIN

It is official! The UCSB basketball team will open the season tonight against the Melbourne, Victoria Tigers. Tipoff is set for 8:05 in Rob Gym.

The Gauchos have been practicing since October 15, with six newcomers competing for spots on the squad. The most heavily contested area has been the guard position.

"Both players, Matt Maderos and Jeff Perry, have looked extremely good in practice," Head Coach Ralph Barkey said. "Brad Turrell and Richard Ridgway have turned in extremely good performances in practice, and those four players have been dominant among our guards."

Earlier in the week, Barkey officially named Perry and Maderos as starters for the Australian contest. Barkey also cited the possibility of Ridgway starting, if he does decide to go to a three guard offense.

Maderos comes from Butte Junior College where he averaged 24 points per game, while shooting 91 percent from the free throw line and 60 per cent from the floor.

"He's a very unselfish player, and he has already gained the respect of his teammates," Barkey said.

Perry will be directing the UCSB offense. A transfer from Santa Monica J.C. Perry is "a complete player in terms of playing both ends of the floor," according to Barkey.

In the fore-court, Senior Tom Flavin and J.C. transfer Pete Aronchick are the designated starters. Barkey has been pleased with Flavin's play so far during practice. Flavin will be counted on to play a key role in the middle with the loss of Wayne Stevenson for the season.

Aronchick, who was a teammate of Perry at Santa Monica, has been slowed somewhat by a severe charley horse. However, the 6'7" junior scored 18 points in a recent scrimmage and he should be ready to go.

If the head coach elects to start three forwards, two freshman recruits will figure prominently in the plans. Brian Busacca or Greg Howard will be one of the starters in the event of the three big man line-up.

Busacca, a 6'6" forward from Bakersfield High, broke Pete Cross' season records for most points and most rebounds in one season in high school. He averaged 17.9 points and 12.9 rebounds per game his senior year.

"Brian gets better every day," Barkey said. "He's a very tough, physical player who is the type of rebounder that moves the ball extremely well."

AS BASKETBALL SEASON OPENS TONIGHT FOR UCSB, head coach Ralph Barkey hopes he won't have too many moments like this one. The Gauchos will face a team from Melbourne, Victoria, Australia at 8:05 in Rob Gym. (Photo by Eric Woodbury)

Howard, according to the coach, is psychologically one of the best players to come into the UCSB basketball program in recent years. He was an outstanding high school defensive player, coming from Fremont High in Oakland, where he won numerous All-League and All-City Honors.

By RICHARD BORNSTEIN

You don't read about her in the Nexus. If there were box scores to the volleyball games, her name would appear maybe once a year. But for two years she has worked as hard as any of her counterparts on the women's volleyball team.

For Terri Needels, her big build-up is everyday at practice. She is a senior, and Saturday will be her last home game to suit up; her career is almost over.

When looking back over her accomplishments, Needels can not remember any outstanding plays against UCLA, USC, or Pepperdine. She has been waiting for that big chance for two years, two years.

"For me, just to suit is my big chance," Needels says. "But, I'll tell you, I'm excited just by sitting on the bench. I feel it is important for me to encourage everyone who plays. I'm content doing that."

Unlike many other athletes, she never played sports in high school. She didn't even think about going out for the team her freshman and sophomore years here, until taking a class from Kathy Gregory. That got her started on the idea.

Needels Ends Spikers Career As Quietly As It All Began

"I hadn't really thought about the team until after my sophomore year some time," Needels recalled. "I'm a physical fitness nut anyway; I always like to keep in shape, doing exercises or something. But when I took the class from Kathy I realized that I could stay in shape by playing volleyball."

As a JV player, Needels has performed well, if not outstandingly. Yet, the Junior Varsity team rarely gets any publicity and consequently her play has not been noticed. In fact, the program makers did not spell Needels' name correctly when they made up the line-up cards. It has to tell you something.

If working hard for two years and having relatively little recognition has bothered her, she does not admit to it.

"It is a unique opportunity to play in an intercollegiate sport," Needels said. The team feeling—the feeling you get from working out with the 16 or so other girls on the team; the camaraderie of working towards that common goal of winning. You can't get that feeling from anything else. It means a lot to me."

Since admittedly there are no game situations which she can look back on, Needels must look for other things in her career. She takes pleasure in pointing out, "I know I have worked my hardest. I have always given 100 percent in volleyball. But that is the way I approach everything so when I went out for the team I knew I would go about it in the same manner."

Her goal is to go into clinical psychology, something that she has worked hard for during her four years here. She never let herself lose sight of that long range goal, even when she had visions of making it big in volleyball.

"It is easy to get a lopsided view on life . . . on people when you're playing sports. I feel that it is important to be well-rounded emotionally, spiritually, physically, and intellectually. I never want to remain stagnant in any of those areas."

After the team faces Long Beach Saturday night following the women's basketball contest against New Mexico State, Needels will never again be a member of the UCSB team. She will go out as quietly as she came in.

"After this season is over I

want someone to remember that I have done my best, and in terms of the team I hope that someone on the team feels that I have helped them with their game. Then I'll be satisfied."

Bonace 'Excited' as UCSB Approaches Season Opener

By LEE OHANIAN

"Excitement and enthusiasm" were the two words UCSB basketball coach Bobbi Bonace used to typify the 1977-1978 women's team. Traditionally, the Gauchos have improved every year, and last year was no exception. The 1976-1977 squad finished with a 15-13 record (6-4 in conference play) and placed third in the Southern California Athletic Association behind Cal Poly Pomona and Northridge.

Bonace has drawn up a difficult schedule for this season, which includes two tournaments and games against USC, Utah, and New Mexico State, but noted, "We like to play stronger opponents — it makes us better players. We have everything to gain and nothing to lose when we face solid teams." Even with stiff competition, Bonace predicts this season will be better than last year.

Five players from last year's team return, including leading scorers Marina Schiff and Mary Ann McLaufflin. "Our depth really excites me," remarked Bonace. "I really think a team is only as strong as its bench; we're not going to emphasize a starting five. We can substitute and not get hurt. I think everyone is going to help us — the talent is very evenly matched."

Bonace feels that the league championship will be decided among Pomona, Northridge, and UCSB. Although the Gauchos have yet to beat Pomona (the sixth ranked team among small colleges) Bonace feels that "we are better matched up this year than any previous year, and should give them a very good game."

"So far, practices have been very productive," says Bonace. "This is the first year that there is not a poor shooter on the team; they're all well-rounded total basketball players. Not only are they all very coachable, but they all came out here with a lot of basketball sense. Normally, the first few practices tend to be teaching sessions, but that's not the case this year. We were able to start working very fast. We're using a 1-3-1 low post pattern offense, in addition to a zone offense. We've stressed solid defense, discipline and lateral movement exercises. One thing we've really got to watch is mental errors and turnovers."

Bonace spoke impressively of (Please turn to p.19, col.1)

- 1 Phi Delt (10-0)—Ecstatic over upsetting Beavers 20-7, returned to old house. Celebrated by singing obscenely outside Pi Phi house.
- 2 Weakmeats (6-0)—Cast removed from quarterback's foot, placed on "White Feet's" swelling head. Clinched playoff berth 21-0 over P.O.P.S. (or was that M.O.M.S.?)
- 3 Ozone Ranger (7-1-1)—Bought stock in Golden West Apples in preparation for the playoffs. Adjusting noose in anticipation of Thursday's Phi Delt match.
- 4 Offsides & Holding (4-1) IM's most cuddly team. Best tight ends and wide receivers in the league. Tough to score on this squad.
- 5 Perviabal Crack (6-0)—New uniforms designed by Rudolph Nureyev; defense not intimidatng in tobacco stained tutu's.
- 6 Almost White (5-0)—Star receiver declared asexual; so is offense. Team split on Bakke case.
- 7 BVAC "B" (5-1)—Junior varsity called up for "A" playoffs. Challenged Almost White in chocolate ripple lookalike contest. Can team survive with a black quarterback?
- 8 Del Playa Wrecking Crew (6-0)—Nutriment poster team of the year, has Arnold Schwarzenegger foldout in playbook. Team practices in front of a mirror.
- 9 Ancient Title (4-0)—Last seen collecting Social Security to pay non-student fees. Top-ranked independent in Goleta Valley. Poor bet to defend title.
- 10 Hot Lava (5-1)—Offense can erupt at any moment. Crater sized gaps in defense. Hard to stop when fired up. Most explosive team since Krakatoa.

Bottom Seven

- 1/8 New Potato Cabooze (6-0)—Lacks one small ingredient for success-talent. Hey, Mike, you're number one.
- 2 FGO-15 (0-7)—Defense struggled to shut out a scheduled bye. Sherlock couldn't help team find a clue. Wanted to play selves.
- 3 Return of Wide Open Beavers (11-1) Nobody loves a loser. Wide Open Beaver offense clamped shut by Greek defense. Starry-eyed halfback completed both of his passes to Phi Delt cornerbacks.
- 4 Bruins (0-5) As intimidating as Fredo Corleone. Team's best offensive weapon is the punt. Looking for Mr. Goodbar.
- 5 UCSB Water Polo Team (0-3)—Forget about recent losses to Stanford and Irvine, team quartet lost Davirro Henninger guzzling record by 50 seconds over weekend.
- 6 The Greeks (Phi Sigs, Theta Delt, Pi Phis, Phi, Phi Beta Kappa, and Alpha Beta with Alan Hamill) (40-45-1)—
- 7/8 Nexus Chainsaw Massacre (3-3) Team looking to rebuild, hired UCEN II Construction Company. Most publicized team since the California Angels (remember Don Baylor?)

Dendo Heads for Nationals As UCSB's Only Runner

On a golf course in Austin, Texas this Saturday, at 11 a.m., 247 college women will be awaiting the start of the 1977 Cross Country National Championships.

UCSB's Joyce Dendo will be one of those talented runners preparing to start the 5000 meter course.

Because of her 16th place finish overall in the Regionals at Berkeley two weeks ago, Dendo became one of ten individual runners who qualified for the prestigious affair. In addition, Cal State Northridge, UCLA and Stanford will be representing the West Coast as they were the top three teams in the Regionals.

"I'm really excited. I've never been to anything really this big before," said Dendo.

Emphasizing that she did not yet feel nervous, her goal is simply to do her best.

Dendo's best time this year is 18:57, done here at UCSB, but head coach Laurel Treon, who will accompany Dendo to Texas, believes this race will most probably lower this standard.

"She is physically and mentally prepared. Should the conditions be good (weather-wise) I expect Joyce to run her best time of the year. Her strategy will be an important part of her race," noted Treon.

The course is made up of two 2500 meter loops and slims down from a wide starting line to 10 meters across after the initial 300 yards. The key then is to get a good fast start so as not to be cut off.

If Dendo is able to do this Treon feels that the stiff competition of the Regionals will provide her with an edge over her opponents.

"She has an advantage because she has run against the best. Cal State Northridge is probably favored to do very, very well. UCLA is not far behind," spoke Treon. "She knows she can go with them."

Joyce Dendo will also be the first UCSB runner ever in the Women's Nationals. Thus all together this Saturday in Texas will be history making for Gauchos sports.

Ruggers to Start Season

UCSB's Rugby Teams will both hold their season openers Saturday in Campus Stadium.

First on will be the women ruggers, who will face the San Francisco Rugby Club at 11 a.m. Then it will be the men when they face the Irvine Coast Rugby at 1 p.m. Admission will be free.

San Diego, will operate at the low post. Last year she was a 49 percent field goal shooter, collected 146 rebounds, finished as the teams 2nd leading scorer with 304 points, and was named to the Southern California Athletic Association All Conference team. "Mary Ann spent the summer playing in the Olympic development league. She gained self-confidence, has tremendous finesse, smooth moves, and has learned to play more aggressively," Bonace said.

Laurie Wilson is a 5'10" senior forward who "has a perfect shot — her technique is excellent. She's also a great ball handler with good speed and has adapted to a team concept."

Patti Green is a 5'4" senior guard-forward, and an excellent defensive player. "She's a good ballhandler and plays great defense," said Bonace.

Bonnie Lind, a 5'6" senior guard is "one of the strongest athletes we have and has fine leadership qualities," according to Bonace.

There are six new Gauchos this year, all of whom will contribute. Sue McGilpin is a 5'6" freshman guard out of Dos Pueblos High in Goleta. "Sue is very fast and penetrates well." Peggy McGuire, a 5'6" freshman guard, exhibits super shooting technique, and "has great court sense in addition to being a superb passer. She is a strong all around player."

Janet Pande is also a 5'6" freshman guard from Lafayette, where she was a high school All American. "Janet is a born leader, a good ball handler and passer. Her greatest strength is her quick release — no defender really has a chance to stop her,"

Bonace said.

Anne Carrington is a 5'9" junior transfer from UCSD, where she was leading scorer for 2 years.

Mary Beth Kidwell, a 5'8" junior forward, coached high school basketball for two years before coming to UCSB. "Mary Beth is a much better player now. She's a natural leader, a great shooter, and quick on defense," says Bonace. Mary Lou Stephenson is a 5'11" senior transfer from Cal Poly Pomona, where she competed in the AIAW small college national tournament for three years.

"The difference between this year's team and last year's squad is their sense of commitment. They look to themselves, in addition to the coach, for improvement. They're a very highly motivated, hard working group. I really think we'll have a fine year," Bonace said.

The Gauchos open their season tomorrow against New Mexico State at Robertson Gym.

Gauchos to Irvine For SCAA Relays

UCSB's women's swimming and diving team travels to UC Irvine Saturday for the Southern California Athletic Association Relays. All six schools in the conference will compete.

"The purpose of the meet is for all the conference teams to get together prior to the season and see what kind of talent they're going to be up against," head coach Suzie Dressler said.

The meet is limited to combined relays only, and Dressler will concentrate on events that will prepare her team for the AIAW Nationals in March, including the 200 and 400 yard medley relays, and the 400 and 800 yard freestyle relays.

Dressler expects her squad to sweep the meet despite some tough opposition from Northridge and UC Irvine.

The Gauchos got their pre-season off to a promising start last weekend when they captured first place at the All Cal meet at UC Davis. UCSB netted 168 points, winning for the first time in the meet's six year history. Cal took second place with 136 points, and UC Irvine finished third with 80 points.

UCSB set three All Cal records at Davis and qualified for the Nationals in two events. Records were set by Sandy Neilson in the 100 yard freestyle (53.5), Carolyn Woods in the 50 yard breast stroke, and Kim Veenstra in the 50 yard butterfly (27.5).

"It's unbelievable that we already have people qualifying for the Nationals this early in pre-season," said Dressler. "We haven't even begun to tap our potential."

Some of the upcoming home meets this season for UCSB will be USC, Cal Poly SLO, University of Colorado, UCSB Invitational, and Cal State Northridge. Away meets will include the San Diego Invitational, San Diego State, and Cal State L.A.

French Farce to be Presented Saturday

Parlez-vous francais? If you do speak French, and even if you don't, you may be interested in the "Friends of the French Institute's" presentation of George Courteline's one act farce "Les Boulingrin."

The play will be presented in the auditorium of the Trinity Episcopal Church at 1500 State Street at 8:00 p.m. Saturday, November 19th. It will be presented in French, and admission will be free.

UCSB French Professor, Andre Malecot, plays one of the lead characters, Des Rillettes, an aging freeloader who imposes himself upon the hospitality of his unwilling hosts, Mr. and Mrs. Boulingrin. This couple, however, proves to be quite a match for the crafty Des Rillettes.

The Boulingrins will be played by Thomas and Sally Mueller of Santa Barbara, and their maid, Felicie, will be played by Kathy Rowland, a UCSB graduate student in the field of French.

A group of French exchange students will lead the audience in singing French songs before the play. Robert McKay, a summer student at UCSB's Summer Institute of French Language and Culture, will then give a brief explanation of the play.

The play was put on this summer by students at the Institute. The Institute was launched last summer as a three year program of intensive study in French language and culture. Students obtain their Masters Degree at the end of the program.

Most of the students are high school French teachers who want their Masters Degree but are unable to work for it during the regular school year. The Institute takes over the Fountainbleu, an off-campus dorm, for six weeks, during which students must agree to speak nothing but French.

Last year the Institute had fourteen students ranging in age from 22 to 65. This year they are advertising nationally in order to attract more students. They hope this play will bring them some publicity in the community.

"We're giving it to bring the Institute to the attention of everyone," Malecot concluded.

An aging freeloader imposing on the hospitality of an unwilling couple is the background for wild action in "Les Boulingrin", a farce being presented tomorrow at Trinity Episcopal Church in Santa Barbara.
