Distracted Motorist Strikes 2 Lecturers in I.V. Friday Night

Alcohol didn't play a part in the collision at all.
—Kevin Coomer
CHP officer

At approximately 9:20 p.m. on Friday evening a vehicle struck two pedestrians crossing Embarcadero del Norte at Cervantes Road.

The victims, Pablo Orduna-Portus and Miguel Senosiain, both 23-year old Brazilian lecturers at UCSB, were immediately transported to Santa Barbara Cottage Hospital, where Senosiain was treated for minor injuries and released, California Highway Patrol Officer Kevin Coomer said. Orduna-Portus, who suffered head trauma and underwent surgery on Saturday morning, was in stable condition Sunday.

"The first subject closest to the car hit the windshield. ... He suffered an intracranial hemorrhage and went to surgery [Saturday] morning," Coomer said. "He's still in the [intensive care unit], but he's in stable condition, which is good."

The driver, 20-year-old UCSB student Connor

Swegle, was reportedly driving northbound on Embarcadero del Norte at approximately 30 mph and did not see the pedestrians because he was distracted by another vehicle, according to Coomer.

"The driver's attention was distracted by a white-colored vehicle that was driving westbound on Cervantes [Road] toward Embarcadero del Mar at the same time," Coomer said. "The driver said the car traveling westbound distracted him because he didn't think they were going to stop. When he realized they were going to stop, he saw the pedestrians."

Coomer said the CHP investigation is ongoing, but no charges have been filed yet.

"It doesn't appear any of the three had alcohol in their system, so alcohol didn't play a part in the collision at all," he said.

Doctors at Goleta Valley Cottage Hospital pronounced D'Amico dead at 10:21 p.m. The cause of death has not been announced, pending the outcome of an autopsy.

When he fell, D'Amico was onstage performing in "The Potboiler" before a crowd of 50 to 60 people. He had been improvising and "at the top of his game" all night, dramatic arts Assistant Professor Irwin Appel said, and at first it seemed like part of the performance. When D'Amico did not get up, someone called 911.

D'Amico was also scheduled to star in a May 11 variety show for Queer Pride Week at UCSB. Organizers from the Resource Center for Sexual and Gender Diversity postponed the variety show, instead using Isla Vista Theater as the site of a candle-light vigil at 7 p.m. on Eight hundred people from around Santa Barbara County flooded State Street on Saturday for the First Annual People's March for Economic Justice.

The march, part of a statewide event, was organized locally by the UCSB Campus Labor Action Coalition (CLAC), with the help of various other groups, including the Isla Vista and Carpinteria Tenant's Unions and the Coalition for a Living Wage. The day began at Ortega Park with a traditional Aztec presentation of dance and music, as well as various speakers, proceeded from Cota Street to State Street and ended at the Santa Barbara County Courthouse with a rally.

The march was organized in response to economic issues within Santa Barbara, including the proposed living wage ordinance, which seeks to raise the minimum wage for city employees to $11 per hour with health benefits or $12.25 an hour without health benefits.

Chicano studies Professor and CLAC member Ralph Armbruster-Sandoval said CLAC was originally interested in the global issue of sweatshops exploiting their workers, but shifted its involvement to a local level with the living wage campaign.

"We wanted to do something in solidarity with the Coalition for a Living Wage," he said. "We want to create a dialogue in Santa Barbara. ... Is this going to be the playground for the rich or a comfortable place to live for working and middle class families?"

Dass Williams, a consultant to the Coastal Alliance United for a Sustainable Economy, spoke to protesters about the way poverty has become an economic trap. Williams said a living wage ordinance, similar to the one he helped to get passed in Ventura last week, could solve the issue of poverty the

McVeigh Reconsiders Execution Choice

WASHINGTON (AP) — Timothy McVeigh's lawyers said Sunday he is reevaluating his position on wanting to be executed after learning the FBI failed to disclose evidence in the Oklahoma City bombing case.

The FBI's lapse has prompted members of Congress to urge hearings into how it happened, and one Democrat wants President George W. Bush to appoint a blue-ribbon commission to review the FBI.

McVeigh has not instructed his defense team to pursue a particular legal strategy. But attorney Robert Nigh said when McVeigh made his original decision not to pursue further appeals, he had no idea the FBI had withheld evidence.

"In light of that, it's completely reasonable for him to reevaluate his position," Nigh told "Fox News Sunday." "The facts of the case are now certainly at issue."

McVeigh "has indicated now that he is at least willing to take a fresh look at things, hear our analysis of the facts contained within the documents and our legal analysis of his options," Nigh said on CBS' "Face the Nation."

A second defense lawyer questioned whether the FBI has disclosed all evidence. "Are we going to learn next week that there are yet more documents?" Nathan Chambers said on ABC's "This Week."

A former prosecutor in the case said she believed the foul-up was unintentional and that the documents should not affect the outcome of the case.

"He has confessed to the crime. The evidence during the trial was absolutely overwhelming," Beth Wilkinson said on General John Ashcroft because of the evidence foul-up.

Ashcroft said he will not impose any further delays.

Just days before McVeigh was to be executed, the FBI disclosed that some 3,135 investigation materials — including interview reports and physical evidence such as photographs, letters and tapes — were withheld from McVeigh's lawyers.

McVeigh was to be executed for the April 19, 1995, bombing of the Alfred P. Murrah Federal Building in Oklahoma City that killed 168 people, including 19 children.

The defense team has just begun reviewing the documents, and Nigh said he was not prepared to disclose what was in them. He did, however, contend that "the fact of the production itself could possibly change the legal outcome of the case."

'Hitchhiker's Guide to Galaxy' Author Dies at 49

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Douglas Adams, whose cult science fiction comedy "The Hitchhiker's Guide to the Galaxy" drew millions of fans and spawned a mini-industry, has died at age 49.

The British-born Adams died Friday of an apparent heart attack at Cottage Hospital in Santa Barbara a family friend, Elizabeth Gibson, said Saturday. She said Adams collapsed while working out at a gym.

"He was not ill," Gibson said. "This was completely unexpected."

The "Hitchhiker's Guide," which began as a British Broadcasting Corp. radio series in 1978, is a satirical adventure about a group of interplanetary travelers; it opens with the Earth being destroyed to make way for an intergalactic highway.

It was turned into a book, which sold 14 million copies around the world, and later into a television series.

The book was followed by several sequels, including The Restaurant at the End of the Universe, Life, the Universe and Everything and So Long, and Thanks For All the Fish.

The books blended satire, memorably named characters such as Zaphod Beeblebrox and Marvin the Paranoid Android, and witty philosophy, at one point supplying the answer to "the ultimate question of life, the universe and everything." The answer was "42."

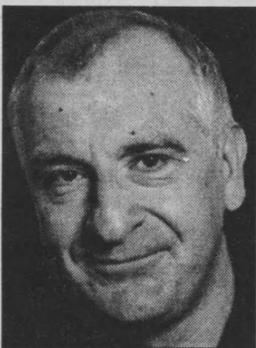

Geoffrey Perkins, the BBC's head of comedy, called Adams "absolutely one of the most creative geniuses to ever work in radio comedy."

"He probably wrote one of the greatest radio comedy series ever, certainly the most imaginative," he added.

Born in Cambridge, England, in 1952 and educated at Cambridge University, Adams began his career as a writer and script editor at the BBC.

A frequent radio broadcaster on science and technology, Adams had been working for several years on a screenplay for an off-delayed "Hitchhiker's Guide" movie.

Adams married Jane Belson, a lawyer, in 1991. The couple, who had lived in Santa Barbara since 1999, had a 6-year-old daughter, Polly. Adams is also survived by his mother, Jan Thrift of England.

SALT LAKE CITY (AP) — A man who lives with his five wives and 29 children in the remote Utah desert goes on trial Monday in the state's first polygamy prosecution in decades.

Tom Green, who says his lifestyle is a God-given choice and has vigorously defended it on TV talk shows, faces charges of bigamy and criminal nonsupport. He could face 25 years in prison if convicted on all counts.

He believes the government has singled him out because he's been so outspoken.

"You stick your head out of the hole, the government will shoot it off," said Green, 52. "The state's driving this thing back underground where they want it to stay."

Green himself has been anything but underground. He has appeared on several television shows to defend his lifestyle, including "Dateline NBC" and "The Jerry Springer Show" and has held news conferences despite a judge's warning not to do so.

Juab County Prosecutor David Leavitt, Gov. Mike Leavitt's brother, has said he never would have known about Green if he had not appeared on television.

JERUSALEM (AP) — A militant Hamas leader released Sunday from a Palestinian prison in Gaza says the mainstream Palestinian leadership now agrees that armed conflict is the only way to deal with Israel.

Abdel Aziz Rantisi, a Hamas leader who has been arrested repeatedly by Yasser Arafat's police, told The Associated Press that he was not questioned during his week in prison, and no charges were brought against him. He was detained after criticizing Arafat's Palestinian Authority.

In a telephone interview, Rantisi said that despite his arrest, Hamas and Arafat now see eye to eye. He charged that "the mentality of the Israelis is aggression against our people," and that Palestinians, including the Palestinian Authority, "believe that the only way for the Palestinians is to fight to defend their people, to defend their land."

Commenting on Rantisi's remarks, Gaza security chief Mohammed Dahlan, considered close to Arafat, said, "We can't be partners with the Israelis as long as their aggression continues."

In honor of Mother's Day, I have prepared a poem for the Weathermother:

You let me spend nine months in your gut,
And kicked me out after I was as big as a coconut.
By the time I was four I was taller than you,
But you still helped me take a poo.
That time I tried to flush a girl down the toilet,
You got her out & framed that mean kid, Chet.
And when the Weatherbrother kicked my ass,
You were always there to watch and laugh.
That time I said I asked about premarital sex,
You just laughed and said 'eat your Wheat Chex.'
If ever I asked you what function nipples had,
You patiently said, "Ask your freak-show dad."
And that time we Weathersiblings were fighting in the car during our growth,
You turned around and lovingly said "shut up or I'll smack you both."

Seminar Ends With Talks on Social, Economic, Environmental Concerns

BY REBECCA TUREK
Reporter

Approximately 100 people filled Isla Vista Theater on Saturday night to attend the final installment of the Many Faces of the Environment, a conference focused on promoting discussion concerning environmental injustice.

The all-day conference, which coincided with the People's March for Economic Justice, held morning workshops and hosted speakers in the evening to address the connection between social and economic issues and the environment.

The five-hour evening session featured keynote speakers LeVonne Stone and Julia Butterfly Hill, as well as a panel discussion with members of activist groups.

Stone, executive director of the Fort Ord Environmental Justice Network, said the goal of the evening was to realize the ways human rights and environmental justice are related.

"The struggle is not ending. We have to make sure the generations to come know what we're fighting for. We are our brother's keepers. We have to look out for each other, no matter what race or creed. ... We can either work together or perish," she said.

Stone said her family, along with 200 other families, were evacuated from their apartments on the California Fort Ord army base in 1994 due to pollution.

"The government doesn't understand that they polluted our community. ... They disbanded our restoration advisory board because we asked hard questions, like 'Why are we being polluted? What about the landfill? Where do we fit in?"

Do you want us to disappear?" she said. "I don't want to be one of those people who just falls through the cracks. ... We have to understand what's going on and keep up the struggle, get educated. Some responsibility has to be taken by our government — they work for us."

Hill, founder of the Circle of Life Foundation, lived in a redwood tree named "Luna" in Humboldt County for more than two years to protest logging. Hill said it is important for everyone to realize the power they have in themselves to change the world.

"I'm trying to show the world that not only can we make a difference, we do. People ask me, 'How did you choose the Luna tree sit, Julia?' I didn't choose the Luna tree sit; it chose me. I realized that if I walked away my inaction was just as bad as the Pacific Lumber Corporation's action," she said.

Hill said the lesson her 738-day tree sit taught her was the power of unconditional love.

"The hardest part was that I was sitting in an active logging plan — it was like watching my friends and family die. The chainsaws echoed in my dreams at night," she said. "I learned the power of love through finding a way to deal with what I was going through. Nature gives to us unconditionally everyday. Eventually nature will not be able to, and it will be because we made it unable to do so."

In order to help the environment, it is important to learn the impact of one's actions and join efforts together, Hill said.

"There's no such thing as inaction or nonaction, because it has an impact. Don't give your power to the corporations or the city of Santa Barbara faces.

"The city and county creates jobs that are so low paid that they force people to rely on the government," he said. "Wouldn't it be cheaper for tax payers and more dignified for workers to have a living wage?"

The march began later than scheduled, with roughly 300 to 400 participants. CLAC committee member Chrystine Lawson estimated that by the time protesters reached their destination at the county courthouse lawn, there were 800 people in attendance.

"I was really excited by the turnout as well as the energy of the people," she said. "There were people who were pissed off at the situation but willing to do something about it in the form of a constructive action. It was exactly what the organizers were looking for."

The second rally, held on the steps of the courthouse, included speakers from the United Farm Workers, American Civil Liberties Union and UCSB faculty.

UCSB history Professor Alice O'Connor said the issue of economic injustice, particularly the living wage ordinance, affects students at UCSB because they are going to be faced with jobs that do not guarantee benefits or decent wages when they graduate.

"The sad reality is that Santa Barbara has come to represent to society at large the extremes of wealth and poverty," she said. "Students have an immediate interest in shaping the community that they want to live in."

CLAC member Shana Singh said UCSB students wrongly assume their college degrees will guarantee them job security and decent wages, but the tenuous position of campus lecturers shows this is not always true.

"These people are very educated and qualified, yet they too lack any job security," she said.

Mariah Reiser, a junior environmental studies major, said students should be concerned with the proposed living wage ordinance because of how it could potentially affect their lives once they leave UCSB and I.V.

"Soon [students] are going to leave the shelter of UCSB and face reality," she said. "Many students aren't middle class and affluent and are going to want to maybe be able to buy a home. A living wage can help with that."

Brian Helmle, the networking co-chair for the I.V. Tenant's Union, said the march might let people know that both students and families in I.V. are starting to come together to fight for better living conditions.

"Even affluent students can feel this oppression from landlords," he said. "That might inspire some empathy and social change, and people will see that this is a shared struggle."

The overall mood of the march and two rallies was upbeat and festive, sociology graduate student and CLAC member Glyn Hughes said.

"People were inspired by the symbolism of collectively expressing our concerns on the main economic corridor of Santa Barbara, State Street," Hughes said. "Ordinarily, these critical voices are excluded from the sunny, affluent images of Santa Barbara."

Be Careful What You Wish For

Goletans May Be Disappointed With a City That Excludes I.V.

HENRY SARRIA

With a six-to-one vote, LAFCO sent the idea of Isla Vista's inclusion in the Goleta cityhood plan down the shitter. That was last week's news. So what now?

What, if anything, does the future hold for our little beachside community now that we are still unincorporated and fully exposed to excessive political influence from North County? Come November, will the residents of Goleta vote with their wallets and say "no" to cityhood (once again), based on Isla Vista's exclusion and, as a consequence, "no" to the loss of tons of potential revenue in city dollars? I don't know.

What I do know is that now we are truly on our own, and the local powers must do everything they can to ensure we won't fall victim to the intentions of the Willy Chamberlain clique that so wants to ruin this area.

We must make sure that our only representation in local government, 3rd District Supervisor Gail Marshall, ensures that the services and funding needed for our area will not be squandered solely on improving Goleta, should it become a city after the November election.

Accountability is the key word here, and a close watch on county and state money will have to be conducted, especially knowing the intentions and sentiments of the "anti-Isla Vista" contingent of the Goleta Now! crowd. They got their cake for now, and they'll want more icing on it before they eat it. More icing translates to more money.

Redistricting is also going to be a factor to watch for. Will this bring a North County influence into bigger play in the Goleta Valley? Now that it's on its way to becoming a city, I'm willing to bet dollars to doughnuts that the North County contingent is going to want to make its mark on the area just out of spite.

This is the time to consider all available options for Isla Vista and make an assessment of what can be done to prevent any more lack of representation than we currently have, as well as prevent any North County interference in our community.

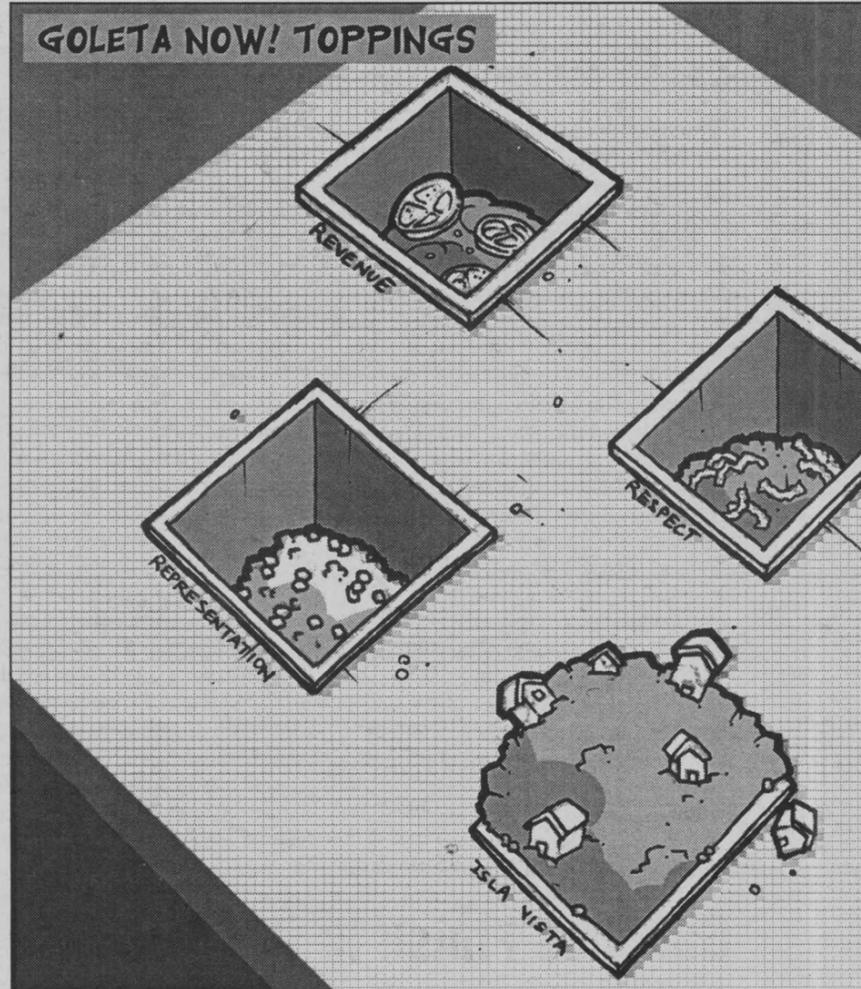

There's an old Russian saying that states, "a tame housecat backed into a corner quickly becomes a savage tiger." And backed into a corner we are. Actually, we're more like an island, and survival is the way of the wild, especially when you consider the intentions of the obvious good-old-boys network that has tried to get its way in past elections.

But the fact remains that the reason the good old boys didn't get their way was not solely based on the votes from Isla Vista. Many folks from Goleta don't want North County influencing politics in their community. Let North County stay where it is — away from us. There are pluses to our exclusion, though. Political maneuvers such as this past one tend to galvanize a community. We now know where we stand in the scheme of things, and a plan needs to be formulated to preserve and improve our area with no help from our neighbors in Goleta. Of course, this is granted that cityhood passes in November.

It is a sad statement that even though the evidence was there, proving that inclusion of Isla Vista would be a financially more feasible option, inclusion of our community was ruled out overwhelmingly. More proof that it was never about financial viability and common sense, but rather just another decision based on the voice of resentment for our community from our neighbors, founded on special interest by those seeking to teach us a lesson for their past political blunders. With the "anti-Isla Vista" contingent of Goleta Now!, it has never been about burning couches or a transient population; it's all about who they want to usher into the Goleta Valley to increase development under the guise of less government. It was the fears that Isla Vista, as a political power, would not let it happen that led that contingent down the path to exclude Isla Vista from the big picture. It would've been a nice picture, but ... Maybe if cityhood goes through, the voters of Goleta will get the nightmare they wish for. But it's on Isla Vista because we don't want it excluding us we want it less. You've gone from a housecat in the corner into a tiger. You may get your little city come November or maybe not, but it won't be what it could've been, and you will only have your irrationality of our little community to blame. It is not that misconceptions overruled logic. It is too bad.

You may get your little city come November, or maybe not, but it won't be what it could've been ...

Henry Sarria is a longtime Isla Vista resident.

The Reader's Voice

'HOMELESS' DESERVE BETTER THAN UNJUST CRIMINALIZATION

Editor, Daily Nexus:

So, my friend's homeless. Actually, a bunch of my friends are homeless. Some don't even like the term homeless, because it's a term created by our culture. Who's to say somebody can't have a home simply because they don't pay the rent? However, from the knowledge I've picked up from my friends, it's not so much living day to day, sleeping outside, finding work when possible and searching for food that bothers them. It's all the shit tacked on to the label of "homelessness" by people in the community and by our government.

Did you know it's illegal to be homeless? If you're homeless in Isla Vista and you get caught sleeping at night, it's considered camping, and camping is against the law. If you decide to try to work or take care of some other business throughout the day, and you stash some belongings in the park, the Isla Vista Recreation and Parks District will throw away whatever it finds. It's considered policy. If you happen to make it downtown and decide to sit on a particular street corner, you're bound to pick up a ticket under the no-sitting ordinance on State Street — that is, if you're homeless or even look like you might be. And lastly, if you have a dog, you can never take it off its leash as long as it's alive because it's illegal, unless you have a yard or living space to do so.

So, essentially, if you find yourself homeless, you can't sleep, you can't take your dog off a leash, you can't store your belongings and you can't sit in certain places among other things. A human right becomes a crime, and this doesn't just happen in Santa Barbara, but all across the country. What ends up happening to many homeless people who receive tickets for such infractions, which they cannot possibly afford, is that the ticket goes to warrant. When you have a warrant, a police officer can pick you up at any given moment and take you to jail to serve time for unpaid tickets. This usually amounts to a few days behind bars, capping off the revolving door of a ticket, warrant and then jail time.

These people are criminalized for unfortunate turns in life or for choosing to live a lifestyle not congruent with the proper way of living in America. This only adds to the stress that homeless people deal with on a daily basis. My friends have been kicked out of local restaurants (even though they were paying customers), they've been harassed by police, they've had bottles thrown at them from students and they've been made out to be fools on IVTV. Many people think of them as nonhuman. And we wonder why people on the street resort to alcohol?

I'm not saying each person on the street is a saint, because obviously everyone has a different story and a different outlook. But, I am saying that homeless people exist in this community who have much to communicate and share, who care about Isla Vista, who can teach us a lot if we only listened and who deserve something better than criminalization.

For this reason and others, I marched for economic justice downtown last Saturday alongside my friends, who fight each day because of the label of homelessness. I marched for justice on many fronts, such as housing, a safe environment and women's rights, but my heart was with my friends. For more information on the march, see www.peoplesmarch.org.

A.S. President-Elect Indulges in Costly Pipe Dreams

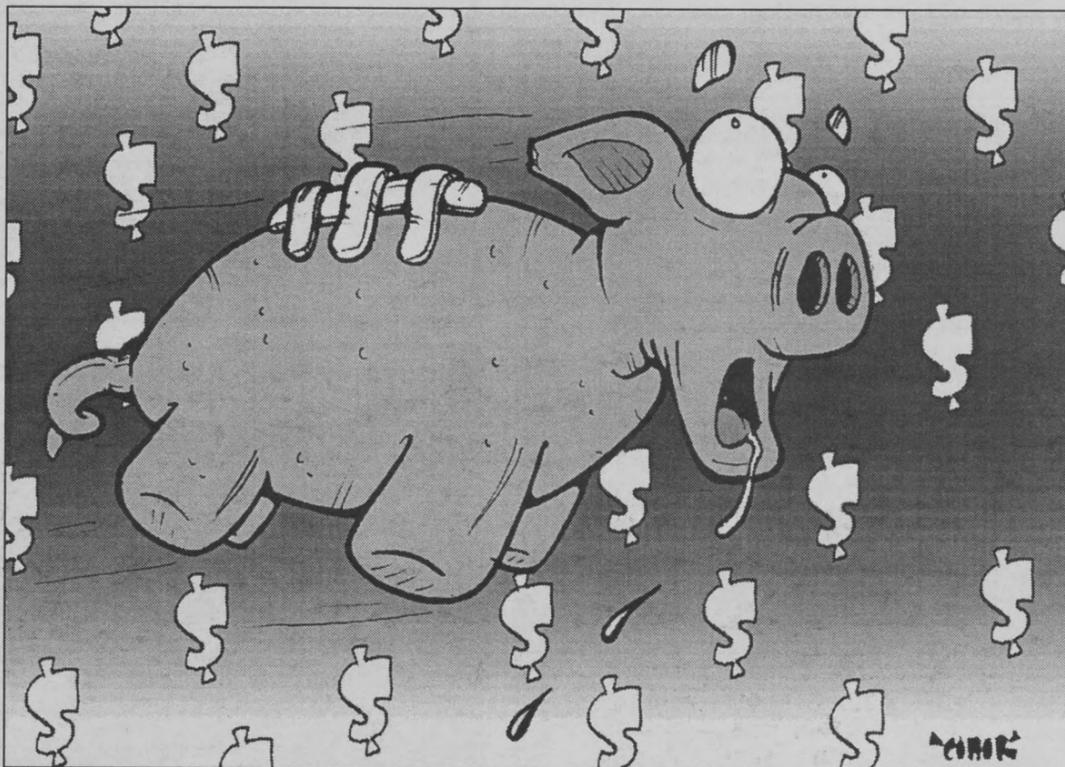

STEVEN RUSZCZYCKY

Imagine waking up on a Saturday morning to the sound of a brass band butchering "Rock You Like a Hurricane," accompanied by the mind-numbing chant of cheerleaders shaking shredded plastic. You try to block it out, but still it comes, emanating from Harder Stadium where a bunch of guys are chasing after a dead, hollowed out pig. If that doesn't set your skin crawling, what if you unwillingly paid for it? Spooky.

Associated Students President-elect Brian Hampton's plan to once again revive UCSB's long dead football program is, at best, a good intention gone wrong. It's the last thing that UCSB needs right now, and any plan to create one will be expensive, time consuming and a waste of valuable resources that could be used elsewhere. The shaky history of the UCSB football program should be warning enough that the idea of reinstating it is a dead dog better left in the grave.

Hampton's outline for funding the program from alumni donations and a student lock-in fee seems to be satisfying the wants of a few, while ignoring the needs of others. Less than a quarter of the student population signed the petition during Winter Quarter in support of the program. What guarantee is there that any support will exist for the program eight years down the road? If those who have been petitioning for it want it so bad, maybe they should pay for it, and let everyone else spend their cash on things they need more. Having to fork over an extra $93 a year for a program that most students don't want is enough to make a lot of folks padlock their wallets shut.

Trying to satisfy the requirements of Title IX is another big problem, and so far Hampton's idea doesn't seem to address how he would equalize the imbalance that creating a football team would generate. Adding more scholarships or women's sports programs would be nice, but if you're not going to give the female students something equal in quality and content, then it's unfair to them. If our president-elect is set on improving the sports program, maybe he should focus his energy on enhancing what we already have instead of haphazardly adding to it.

CONOR BUCKLEY / DAILY NEXUS

Space is a precious commodity in Santa Barbara. Due to UCSB's location, there are tough building restrictions placed on the university so as not to encroach on and strain the environment. This makes finding a place to build anything a difficult task. The college is in need of renovations, better facilities, dorms and parking structures before it should even think of parceling out land for the buildings that a football program would require. If I have to fork over extra cash, I'd rather it be for improvements that would make the quality of education better, not for a place where big sweaty guys in spandex can play games.

The actual benefits for a football program remain to be seen. For something that will cost so much and require so many resources, there should be something extremely good coming out of its creation. UCSB doesn't need to attract more students, and from what's been said so far, the program itself would probably eat up any revenue generated. This doesn't seem to offer much to the UCSB population at large.

If the program is instated and ends up folding for the third time, you can count it as one of the greatest wastes of energy and resources to date. Hampton should use his power next year to generate improvements and provide programs that will benefit everyone instead of catering to the wants of a select few. Sports are great, but they're not a priority. It's time to let the UCSB football program rest in peace. Amen.

BASIC SCIENTIFIC KNOWLEDGE SUPPORTS FETAL RIGHTS ACT

Editor, Daily Nexus:

I am writing in response to the staff editorial on fetal rights (Daily Nexus, "Unborn Rights," May 8). The piece refers to the House's recent passing of legislation that redefined the human zygote as a living being from the moment of conception, and harm done to it would be a punishable offense. I disagree with the staff's view on the redefinition.

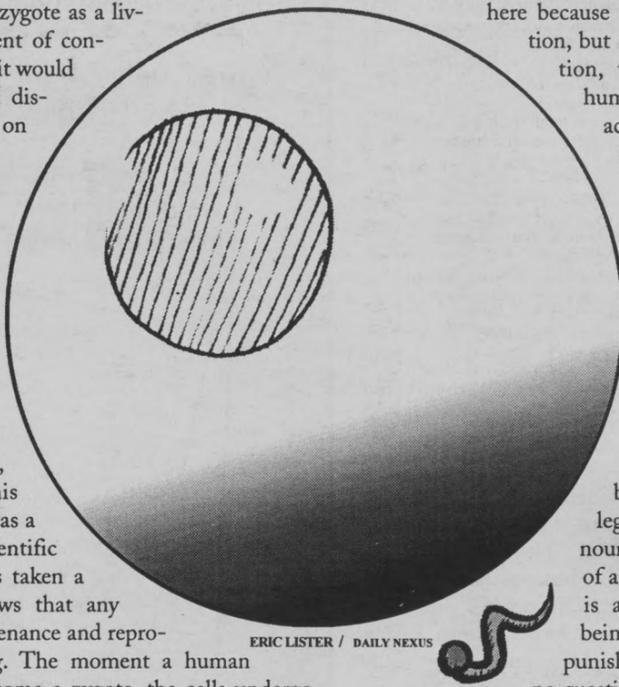

As a Christian, I could continue with declarations on the sanctity of life and argue that the child is not explicitly the mother's — the woman has been chosen as a vessel — however, I realize the world I live in no longer accepts these points of view as legitimate, so I will not take this approach. I will, therefore, as a science major, use a scientific position. Anyone who has taken a basic biology course knows that any organism that takes in sustenance and reproduces is defined as living. The moment a human sperm and egg join to become a zygote, the cells undergo mitosis (take in sustenance and reproduce). From this simple definition, I have proven that a zygote is a living being. And since it is a human zygote to which I am referring, it can be called a living being from the moment of conception — not one month after, not 20 weeks after, not at the moment of birth! This isn't the sanctity of life I am asking one to accept; it is simple biological occurrences that can be witnessed through scientific observation over and over again.

I will not be touching on the "woman's choice" topic here because I am not writing about abortion, but rather about a piece of legislation, which states that causing a human zygote harm is an unlawful act. We live in the United States of America, a nation that has its own view on the sanctity of life, and we have copious laws protecting that sanctity. We believe that ending a human life is wrong and that such an act falls under the jurisdiction of the law. Given the clear and simple definition of life I gave, and our nation's stance on assault, battery and murder, it should be easy to see that the recent legislation is correct in its pronouncements on the classification of a human zygote. A human fetus is a life, and if another human being takes that life, it should be punishable by law. There should be no question about that.

Friday. At 2 p.m. on May 11, D'Amico's friends and teachers gathered at Hatlen Theater to grieve with Greg's parents, Tom and Donna D'Amico. Greg D'Amico's brother and sister were not able to attend.

A senior from Walnut Creek, D'Amico was five weeks from graduating from the selective Bachelor of Fine Arts (BFA) program. Chancellor Henry Yang said the degree would be conferred posthumously. After graduation, D'Amico was to attend the American Musical Dramatic Academy in New York, NY, where he had a scholarship. Donna D'Amico said her son was vibrant, passionate and loved to perform.

"Greg knew he wanted to act from the time he was 6 years old," she said. "Actually, when he was three months old he played the baby Jesus. ... In first grade, he was the turkey in the big black hat in the 'Little Red Hen,' but he managed to know every one else's part and direct it. In third grade, he was the wolf, but he was the wolf in his version of 'the Three Little Pigs,' and the wolf was a vegetarian. In fourth grade he was invited to go down and guest star as the wolf because the third-graders were not getting how to be a wolf. ... He went and auditioned for a movie when he was about age 2, and he was highly insulted that we did not get him an agent."

As a child, Greg D'Amico was always acting, Tom D'Amico said.

"I tried to get Greg into baseball when he was about 7 or 8," Tom D'Amico said. "We put him on a Little League team. He was up at bat, and sure enough, the pitcher hits him with a ball. Greg falls to the ground. He's writhing in pain; everybody came running out of the stands. And we get there, about two feet from him, and Greg popped to his feet and took a bow."

At UCSB, D'Amico was well known and respected in the BFA program, Appel said.

"There's no question to me," Appel said, "that

You need to decide whether you can make a difference. ... The same forces that are killing and suppressing the communities are the same people that are killing and suppressing the Mother Earth. We have to reach out and work together."

Greg exemplified the spirit of the department."

D'Amico was also popular in the school's gay community.

James Bramlett, a 22-year-old former UCSB student, met D'Amico at a Thursday night gay men's group two-and-a-half years ago. Bramlett said D'Amico wore loud, colorful clothes and sometimes put on a blue wig and dressed up as "Lady Isis."

"You'd always see him tearing up the dance floor and being really coquettish with all the guys," Bramlett said. "He had fun. Period. That rubbed off on everyone else. He would be the life of the party."

Bramlett said D'Amico's lively and accepting nature could be traced back to his family.

"His parents loved him openly, even though he was gay," Bramlett said. "Many of our parents would shun us for that fact. I would like to thank his parents for loving him so he could give us that gift of love that some of us have never received."

"He was the highlight of my life," Tom D'Amico said. "I've got two other children, and they're also the highlights of my life, but Greg occupied that special place. He was a kind and gentle person. He loved everybody. He was always standing up for someone else's rights. He was everything I ever wanted a child to be. ... Greg was such a delight. I could talk to him for hours. He'd call me up almost every day — it was just incredible. He always told us how much he loved us."

"Always tell your parent you love them when you hang up the phone or when you visit," Donna D'Amico said. "The last thing my son said to me was, 'I love you, Mom.'"

Most of the 150 people who gathered in Hatlen Theater, and later in I.V. Theater, remembered D'Amico for his humor and energy.

"Right now, he'd be laughing at all of us, with our puffy eyes," Bramlett said. "He'd say, 'Girl, you need to put on some mascara.' I can see him right now, looking down, having a blast and being really proud of himself, saying, 'Yeah, I did good.'"
