Faculty Senate Study Criticizes Huttenback

By STEVE BARTH
Nexus News Editor

A confidential report by the Academic Senate Committee on Privilege and Tenure found that while Chancellor Robert Huttenback's decision last June to not reappoint John Carroll as chair of the English Department was made out of "genuine concern" for the department, the action was "needlessly damaging to the chair" and "harmful to the morale of the department."

Dated Aug. 7, the report presents the findings of the committee's investigation into the Carroll incident. The investigation was carried out at the request of 18 tenured members of the English Department.

(Carroll was notified on June 25 that he would not be reappointed and that the Dean of the College of Letters and Sciences, David Sprecher, would serve as acting chair. Last Monday Huttenback named Everett Zimmerman as the new chair of the English Department.)

The report said the chancellor's concerns about the department were not "unfounded," particularly in the area of appointment standards and practices. The report also stated that the department's problems "long antedated" Carroll's one year as chair.

Yet the committee investigation also found that "the manner of removal of the chair (Carroll) has indisputably inflicted damage on his reputation and on the reputation of the department, and it appears to this committee that the damage was needlessly inflicted."

Citing Carroll's claim that he had been unaware of the administration's unhappiness with the state of the English Department and with Carroll's governance of it, the report suggested that with some kind of prior notice, Carroll could have addressed himself to the causes of the administration's concern, corrected any misconceptions on the part of the administration, or at least "gracefully resigned."

The "eleventh-hour" nature of the chancellor's actions, the committee found, pushed the department to public protest and prevented the smooth transition to a new chair.

Concerning the Privilege and Tenure report, Huttenback said, "It (Please turn to p.6, col.1)

Industry to Construct New Coastal Pipeline

By BRAD YOUNG
Nexus Staff Writer

The state of California has recently given control of the Santa Barbara-to-Los Angeles pipeline project to private industry.

Originally proposed by the Santa Barbara Department of Environmental Resources, the pipeline was designed to reduce the environmental hazards of using oil tankers in the channel.

California state planning agencies were formulating a prepared package to speed construction of the pipeline, when several oil-related industries informed the state that they would install the pipeline.

The prepared package included a certified Environmental Impact Report, several building permits, and agreements with those agencies unable to issue building permits at short notice.

According to Dev Vrat of the SBDER, the state has relinquished control of the project, but is ready to step back in if private industry fails to make progress on the project.

The Four Corners Pipeline Company, a wholly-owned subsidiary of Arco Oil, plans to begin construction of a small segment of the pipeline by December.

University Must Release Private Personnel Records

By EVAN LEE
U.C. Press Correspondent

The University of California and the federal government officially ended their confidential personnel files dispute Friday — just two days before the deadline — thus keeping the university from losing more than $25 million in federal contracts.

Under the agreements, the university will turn over copies of the confidential personnel files to the U.S. Department of Labor for the government's investigation into alleged affirmative action violations in nine departments on the Berkeley campus.

As part of the bargain, the government has made four guarantees to the university to help keep the documents confidential:

—Federal investigators will take confidential documents off campus only after getting permission from their superiors

—The government will immediately notify the university if anyone files suit to gain access to the documents under the Federal Freedom of Information Act

—The government will return the copies as soon as the investigation, or any subsequent lawsuits, are concluded.

—If the case goes to court after the investigation, the university will be free to seek a "protective order" from the court, shielding the evidentiary documents from public inspection.

Although the documents dispute was between only the Berkeley campus and the federal government, the agreement applies to all nine U.C. campuses. Government investigation at some of those other campuses has been held up pending the resolution of the Berkeley—federal government problem.

The university barely slipped in under the deadline. On Sept. 5, U.S. Secretary of Labor Ray Marshall ordered that all federal government contracts with U.C. Berkeley be cut-off, a move that would have cost the university at least $25 million, and perhaps as much as $75 million, depending on how the cut-off was implemented by other federal agencies. Marshall's order would have taken effect Oct. 5, so the university got its agreements on the last possible working date.

But the university was not the only party spared grief. The documents dispute was a procedural problem that froze the affirmative action investigation for two years. If the university had not been willing to settle out of court, the dispute could have been entangled in years of litigation, and the substantive issue — affirmative action violations — would effectively have been skirted.

Now the settlement has cleared the way for the investigations on all U.C. campuses to proceed.

It is still possible that the university could eventually lose its federal contracts. Violation of affirmative action guidelines, if proven, might be serious enough to lead an administrative law judge to order the contracts cut-off.

Victim in Stable Condition After Stabbing in I.V.

An altercation between non-students Friday evening in Isla Vista resulted in the stabbing of Keith Miller, 24, at 6682 Picasso Rd., according to a Foot Patrol report. Having received wounds to the stomach, Miller was rushed to Goleta Valley Community Hospital for emergency surgery. Miller currently is listed in stable condition. The alleged assailant is known by police authorities, but has not yet been apprehended.

According to Deputy Sheriff L. Hess the incident took place at about 11 p.m. after a small party which Miller had attended broke up.

Miller said three male suspects "came at me as I was trying to leave with my girlfriend."

Miller, identifying the assailant who allegedly stabbed him only as "Chris," said he did not know him well. Miller also identified one of the other suspects as Paul Romero. The suspects' motives are unknown. "I don't know what happened," Miller said. He recalled having told the suspects repeatedly that he "didn't want to fight."

Although his condition is stable, Miller claimed, "Doctors said that I could have died."

Romero suffered blows to the head by a small club or bat, according to the I.V. Foot Patrol report. He was described as having been in severe pain and clutching his ribs.

According to Hess, the outburst may have stemmed from racial remarks.

LNG Action Dispute; Landowners File Suit

Charging that improper ex parte contracts tainted the Economic Regulatory Administration's decision granting conditional approval of a liquid natural gas receiving, storage and regasification terminal at Little Cojo Bay, Bixby Ranch Co. filed a motion to re-open hearings before that agency.

Bixby filed the motion in the Court of Appeals of the District of Columbia on Sept. 17. The ERA's decision was made on Sept. 26, 1979.

Bixby charged that state and federal agencies at various levels were influenced by contacts from interested outside parties, and therefore their rulings are invalid.

In related litigation, Bixby has moved to re-open proceedings before the Federal Energy Regulatory Commission "in light of new evidence casting doubt on the reliability of United States Air Force assurances to the FERC concerning safety issues raised by the Air Force," according to the motion submitted by George Avery and Jeffrey Liss, attorneys for Wald, Harkrader and Ross, the firm retained by Bixby.

These controversies are the most recent in a dispute that has been ongoing since 1973.

On Nov. 30, 1973, after signing a contract with Pertamina, the state-owned Indonesian gas company, Western Liquefied Natural Gas petitioned the FERC for approval to import gas from Indonesia.

In hopes of offsetting predicted natural gas shortages and in keeping with a policy of lessening national dependence on foreign oil, approval was granted.

During the next few years,

85 possible sites were studied. Subsequent legislation narrowed the field considerably. Oxnard and Pt. Conception were the favored choices.

Bob Whitney of the Santa Barbara Indian Center and Kevin Coyle, former reporter for local radio station KTYD, both anti-LNG activists, have had their personal files and records subpoenaed by Western LNG.

Whitney has been ordered to appear with the subpoenaed documents before Western LNG attorneys on Wednesday to make a deposition. He has declined to comment until after that date.

Hart, Aquino Meet Over Election Issues

By JEFF LESHAY
Nexus Staff Writer

A debate between 35th District Assemblyman Gary Hart and his Republican challenger David Aquino was held at Villa Santa Barbara Thursday night.

The debate was the first of the four-part Critical Cross Currents Series organized by Coordinator-Moderator Dr. John Kay, a political science professor at Santa Barbara City College. An estimated 60 people attended the debate.

Each of the candidates were given six minutes for opening statements. Aquino began by stating his reasons for running for 35th District Assemblyman. He said he decided to challenge Hart because he has become "more and more discouraged with the actions of legislators that we keep sending back to Sacramento."

"Proposition 4 limited state spending, for example, and we need more fiscal spending in Sacramento because there is less money available. We need more fiscal responsibility," Aquino continued.

Aquino added that government is too involved in the medical profession, thus contributing to the rising costs of medicine. He also said that government interferes in personal property rights, and that there are "too many agencies with too much spending."

Hart has held his political position for three terms (six years) and in his opening statements stressed the importance of examining his voting record.

"For example," Hart said, "two days ago five bills I had signed were (Please turn to back page, col.1)

The State

EL PORTAL— Residents in El Portal, a tiny community at the western edge of Yosemite National Park, have been warned to boil their drinking water after tests showed that it did not meet minimum state safety standards. Although at this point it constitutes only a potential threat, the National Park service said 29 of its 31 water sources fall below the standards.

LOS ANGELES— An actress who had been visiting confessed Hillside Strangler Kenneth Bianchi in jail was arrested Thursday for allegedly attempting a "copycat" version of the two Bellingham, Wash. murders Bianchi has admitted. Bianchi admitted to the two slayings after promising to testify against his cousin, Angelo Buono, who faces trial for 10 Hillside Strangler slayings. Bianchi was given a life sentence instead of the death penalty. Investigators suspect that Veronica Lynn Compton was acting at Bianchi's direction to make it appear the "real strangler" has not been captured.

SAN FRANCISCO— Chevron USA Inc. increased its gasoline and other petroleum products prices by 3 to 4 cents per gallon Saturday. A spokesman said the price increases would be reflected at the pumps immediately. According to Jerry Martin, Chevron spokesman, the price hikes were the result of a $2-per-barrel increase in Saudi Arabian crude oil. Martin said the price of regular and premium gasolines was increased 3 cents per gallon, unleaded up 4 cents per gallon, and gasohol 3.6 cents per gallon. The wholesale price for diesel heating oil and jet fuel has also increased. Chevron is the seventh largest gasoline marketer and a subsidiary of Standard Oil of California.

HEADLINERS The Nation

JUNEAU, ALASKA— About 120 miles off southeast Alaska a fire broke out aboard a luxury liner early yesterday, forcing all 510 people aboard to abandon ship for lifeboats, the Coast Guard said. According to Jan Boeren, a spokesman for Holland America Cruises in New York City, there were no reports of injuries aboard the disabled Dutch vessel Prinsendam. He said that, based on information received in New York as of 4 a.m. PDT, there was no danger to the ship or passengers. Ray Massey, a Coast Guard spokesman in Juneau, said the closest vessel to the scene was the 1,000-foot oil tanker Williamsburg, which changed course after the distress call and was expected at the stricken vessel within an hour of the call to abandon ship. Plans called for the passengers and crew to be transferred from the lifeboats to the tanker, and then flown by helicopter to Yakutat, 120 miles north, where there was medical personnel. The cruise began in Vancouver, British Columbia, and was headed for Singapore via Alaska when the fire broke out. The cause of the fire was not known.

JACKSON, MISS.— Ku Klux Klansmen supporting gun sales and Blacks protesting the shooting of a pregnant woman staged separate demonstrations Saturday in Jackson, Miss. Twenty robed klansmen, some wearing hoods, marched peacefully in the Klan demonstration, organized as a show of "white solidarity" for the Jackson Police Department. Jackson police have come under heavy criticism from Blacks since on Aug. 29 a white officer shot to death an armed pregnant woman he said was advancing on him. The Blacks' march, called by the NAACP and Delta Ministries, was joined by about 150 people. Three Blacks were arrested and charged with carrying concealed weapons but they apparently were not part of either protest.

The World

SAUDI ARABIA— An oil-rig blowout released poisonous hydrogen sulfide gas on a small island in the Persian Gulf off the east coast of Saudi Arabia. Sources in the Saudi oil industry reported that 19 people were killed. They blame the blast on technical malfunction unrelated to the Iranian-Iraqi war going on about 150 miles away. Some of the victims of the accident last week near Safaniya were Saudi oil workers, the sources said. One American was killed, as well as workers from the Philippines, Britain and Canada, according to a spokesman for the rig's owner, Reading and Bates Corp., of Tulsa, Okla. Efforts are under way to recap the well.

BEIRUT— According to analysts of the Middle East, the war between Iran and Iraq now seems to be at a stalemate in which both sides are bogged down, at enormous cost to each. Iraqi President Saddam Hussein, who launched the war against Iran on September 22, has miscalculated badly and may turn out to be the chief loser according to the view of diplomatic and military observers. One of analysts' reasons for this is that the Iraqi forces are using Soviet tactics, rather than an attack strategy that lends itself to desert warfare. In the two-week-old war, both Iran and Iraq mounted a new series of air strikes and claimed victories on other fronts. Fierce battles raged Saturday for control of Iran's vital Persian Gulf port of Khorramshahr. After 13 days of fighting, the Iraqi invaders have been unable to secure the port, their primary target just across the Shatt al Arab, the waterway that forms the southern boundary between the two neighboring countries. Meanwhile, Iraq gave no indication that it was abandoning its plan to stop the fighting for four days starting at dawn yesterday. Iran has continued to reject the cease-fire offer. Iraq said it would return Iranian fire so no real letup in the conflict is expected.

Enrollment in Japanese Classes Up Following T.V. Telecast of 'Shogun'

By LISA LEFF
Nexus Staff Writer

Enrollment in the two elementary Japanese classes at UCSB has doubled this year, due, in part, to television's recent presentation of Shogun, according to Keiko E. Mochizuki, lecturer in Japanese for the Eastern Language Department.

Mochizuki reports an increase from 40 to 78 students in the classes. When she asked her students what prompted them to take Japanese, only three of the 78 credited Shogun. However, Mochizuki feels that the number is actually higher.

"Shogun gave an opportunity to drop the inhibition that Japanese is a hard language to learn. What started out as a hidden motivation became a reality with the airing of Shogun," Mochizuki said.

Shogun has also affected the ethnic distribution of the class, according to Mochizuki. Although half of the classes are made up of Japanese-Americans, the other half is a mixture of Black, White and Chicano students.

"Shogun affected the Japanese much in the same way 'Roots' affected the Black-Americans. It made them curious and aware of their past. I feel that Shogun was authentic in the customs and costumes, but perhaps a little exaggerated in the social code. The samurai had an obligation, a tradition to keep. They wouldn't kill people for no reason," Mochizuki said.

Although the Japanese may seem romantic or mysterious, Mochizuki is quick to point out that many students are seriously committed to a language that has little use in Southern California.

According to Mochizuki, Japanese is necessary for those in a wide variety of majors including political science, art history, physics, engineering and marine biology. "Japan is a highly industrialized society. If Americans learn the language they can exchange information with Japanese scientists," Mochizuki said.

Some students' motivation for learning Japanese includes a previous trip to Japan or future plans of going there. Dmitri Hunt, an environmental studies senior is taking the class because he has been invited to live in Japan at the end of the year.

Although he saw only two segments of Shogun, Hunt felt that it "came across very strongly." Despite the fact that so few recognized Shogun as their inspiration, Hunt said,

"I'd be inclined to believe the opposite. I think people are embarrassed to admit that's the reason. I have always wanted to learn Japanese, but never had a reason to."

Freshman Cheryl Caudebec said that people are under the misconception that Japanese is very difficult to learn.

"People say, 'Whoa, you're taking Japanese 1. You must be really weird.' They think it's so hard, but it's not," Caudebec said.

A full-year course, Japanese requires one hour of class a day, two hours of lab and one hour of drill, in addition to homework.

Despite the demanding time requirements, the department had to turn away about 10 students. Ideally, a class has 20 students, but Mochizuki was willing to push the number up to 40.

"I think it is about time the Americans realized that they need foreign language as part of their formal training. I am overjoyed that Shogun has provided a new interest in language, and I only hope that the trend will last a long time," Mochizuki concluded.

Instructor Dies Of Heart Attack

Zoltan von Somogyi, UCSB fencing and soccer coach, died Sept. 27 at Goleta Valley Hospital following a heart attack earlier the same week. He was 65 years old.

Von Somogyi was highly respected by students and faculty alike, not only for his athletic and teaching skills, but for his dynamic personality.

"He was a really great guy," one fencing student remarked. "He came across not only as a teacher, but as a real person."

A 1941 graduate of the Royal Academy of Physical Education, Budapest, von Somogyi first came to UCSB in 1966, the UCSB soccer team from 1966-73, and the fencing team from 1966 until his death.

A native of Dombrod, Hungary, von Somogyi was a USSR prisoner of war during 1950-55, and survived 13 concentration camps. He later became a Freedom Fighter, and made his way to the U.S. in 1957, working first as a consulting engineer in Urbana, Illinois, and then as athletic director in Idyllwild, California.

Von Somogyi is survived by one daughter, Ildeko, and two sons, Zoltan Jr. and Aila, all of whom are Santa Barbara residents. A memorial service will be held on Oct. 10 at 10 a.m. in Robertson Gym.

Reagan Group is Set for Campaign

Students for Reagan at UCSB has a variety of strategies planned to enhance the support of their candidate, according to Kevin Kelley, head of the organization.

Along with the traditional UCen information table, the group tentatively has planned canvassing of Isla Vista, a platform-reading for the residence halls (which will include representatives of all three major candidates), and a rally near the end of October. The first meeting of Students for Reagan will be held Tuesday at 6:30 p.m. in UCen 2294.

The group hopes to dispel many of the negative views associated with Reagan among college students. "We have to make people not feel ashamed to support Reagan," Kelley said.

Dr. Robert Gordon-McCutchan, a religious studies faculty member and sponsor of the group, says another purpose of the organization will be to "deepen our understanding of the American political process through direct participation."

Kelley hopes the organization will evolve into a permanent Young Republican organization to keep students politically involved past the Nov. 4 election. Interested students can contact Kelley at 968-3728 or Gordon-McCutchan at 961-3871 or 682-4685. Further information can also be obtained at the Santa Barbara County Republican Headquarters at 1207 State St.

Openings On Council Available

Heavy Hand

When Chancellor Robert Huttenback made his decision last June not to reappoint John Carroll as chair of the English Department, he clearly did not foresee the repercussions of the action.

Today Huttenback must be regretting the manner in which he carried out the decision; it was a manner which can be categorized as unprofessional and insensitive. A serious error has been made and a public apology is due for the damage he has caused the department and John Carroll. Huttenback's action undermines the faculty role in university governance. The decision cannot be changed, but with the appointment of a new chair, the chancellor should now act to develop more stringent guidelines for handling similar decisions in the future.

Presently the repercussions are quite evident. Carroll's professional reputation has been damaged. The department's dignity has been overrun under the claim that the action was designed to alleviate long-standing problems. Yet we wonder how effectively the department as a whole and Everett Zimmerman, the new chair, can work toward overcoming the problems with the chancellor's action still in mind.

Zimmerman's effectiveness is called into question as he has openly criticized Huttenback's action. Will the administration seek to orchestrate his every move, or at the other extreme will the problems, real and imagined, be left to lie quietly until the episode cools.

Both the Academic Senate Committee on Privilege and Tenure and the American Association of University Professors have been critical of the manner in which Huttenback acted. We concur with these reports.

We do not dispute the chancellor's appointment powers. It is clear that as the head of this institution, Huttenback must be granted certain decision-making powers. Nonetheless, when the decision involves a position as crucial as a department chair, consultation with members of that department, especially its tenured members, is a minimal prerequisite.

At the core of the issue is the limit of his powers. Defining where the chancellor's power stops and where faculty consultation (a major concern of both reports) begins is a line that demands clarification.

We feel faculty consultation is a prerequisite before an action such as this can be undertaken. Carroll was popular with his peers, though in the administration's eyes he was ineffective in dealing with the problems facing the department. This is a decision in which the tenured faculty of the department would have more expertise than the chancellor.

While we do not wish to encourage the making of policies which would only hamper the decision-making process, at the very least all tenured English faculty members should have been consulted.

What happened in the English Department could take place elsewhere. Have other departments been targeted for such actions? There can not be indiscriminate decision-making by the Chancellor. We could support his rationale for this action if adequate consultation had taken place allowing for a smooth change of leadership within the department. Required faculty consultation represents one of the best checks on such abuses of power, a check we believe to be a necessity in the U.C. system.

CalPIRG

Editor, Daily Nexus:

CalPIRG is offering students the opportunity to become involved in the building of an effective and viable activist organization with a strong academic core. CalPIRG has the potential to effect government and corporate policy and decisions not just locally, but statewide, and even nationally, by producing and publishing quality research, by implementing public interest programs, by lobbying government, and in a multitude of other ways. But in order to work, CalPIRG needs student support! Not just financial support, but time and energy and thought from those students willing to get involved. CalPIRG is facing a critical year which will determine its viability at UCSB. You can make the difference! Come check CalPIRG out and meet some people who believe student activism can be effective. General meetings will be held to review past events, present tasks and future goals on Monday, Oct. 6, 5:30 p.m. in UCen 2294, and Tuesday, Oct. 7 at 5 p.m. in UCen 2292. A general election will be held for a permanent 1980-81 Board of Directors on Oct. 14. Don't let the future decide your fate! Become active and decide the fate of your future instead.

Zionism

Editor, Daily Nexus:

The American people this week witnessed a curious twist in the tactics of American Zionists. Usually, they vigorously support any attempt to expose the incredible cruelty of racist Nazism.

But with the recent CBS showing of "Playing for Time," something else seemed more important—the mass condemnation of the star of the movie, Vanessa Redgrave, as a supporter of the Palestinian people and the Palestine Liberation Organization. Many Americans are asking themselves, "Why this turn of tactics?" Why did the Los Angeles Zionists burn an effigy of Vanessa? Why did they frantically chant "Death to Vanessa, Death to Vanessa!" Why do they carry banners that proclaim that Vanessa and Arafat are the same as Hitler? Why did they bomb and rifle several CBS facilities around the country on the night of the showing, as reported by KNBC in Los Angeles? Why have they organized a mass attack on the advertisers (the few who would come forward)?

It is a Zionist cliché that any opposition to Zionism is by definition and intention an attack on the Jewish people, a form of racism—anti-Semitism. This cliché, this outrageous lie, is at the very source of the Palestine tragedy.

Ever since the illegal Balfour Declaration of 1917 the Palestinian Arabs have been struggling to defend their national rights in their homeland, Palestine. In this struggle of self-defense the attack on them and their land has come from Zionism supported first by the British and now by the U.S. The Palestinians therefore fight against political Zionism, not against any race or religion of people. It is a cornerstone of the Palestinian ideology that they do not oppose "the Jewish people"; they have no quarrel with Judaism or any other religion. They are not racists, like Hitler who massacred Jews as Jews. They oppose the political movement that is the cause of their national tragedy—the destruction of hundreds of their villages, mosques, and churches, and the dispersal and dismemberment of their people.

Since 1948, Palestine has been a tragedy for the Palestinian people. Without a fundamental change in the Zionist movement, Israel will be a tragedy for the Israeli people.

'Tiny' Poland

Editor, Daily Nexus:

May I enter a mild demurrer against one word in your feature article about Poland in a recent issue? The word I mean is "tiny"—you spoke of Poland, I believe, as a tiny country.

Of course all size is relative, and I can see how Poland, in relation to gargantuan Russia, India, China, or even the U.S., might seem rather small and defenseless, a David against a Goliath to the east of her. But would you call England, Italy, or West Germany tiny? Poland has more square miles than any of them. Would you call California tiny? Poland's population is more than one and a half times ours. Even though it is courageous of Poland to defy Russia, I still would be happier with a policy of reserving the extreme adjective tiny for Andorra, Liechtenstein, Monaco—or perhaps even Switzerland or Denmark; but it seems incongruous for as large and substantial a state as Poland.

Immigration

Editor, Daily Nexus:

For years we have read about the European Common Market, the Atlantic Alliance and, more recently, the Trilateral Commission. Most European nations are industrialized, most make much the same sort of things, and, with the exception of England, Holland and Germany, most seem able to grow enough food.

When it comes to items of trade, Europe trades mostly exotic foods, styles and tourism and for centuries has exported part of its population and unemployment problems, chiefly to North America.

Russia today is having problems feeding its people and so does Poland. As Russia expands, its problems will increase.

We have fought two big wars in Europe. Europe still owes us billions on World War I debts, to say nothing of World War II. Basically, our wars were fought to save the British Empire, which now is gone. According to the author of Berlin Diary, France refused to fight in its own defense in World War II. Today, we are spending about seventy billion a year to protect Europe and Eastern Asia and are getting nothing in return other than the privilege of providing aid and a market for the goods of these nations overseas.

As for the Western Hemisphere, Mexico is less than one-fourth the size of the United States and cannot feed its people today. Its population is expected to double in twenty years. Central and South America and the Caribbean Islands also are producing a lot of people. Many of these are trying to slip into the United States and our liberal politicians are making them welcome. An overabundance of compassion can turn the U.S. into another China or India so far as overpopulation is concerned.

Birth control is the only solution to the human potential for unlimited reproduction, but religion opposes a birth control policy. Religion thrives on ignorance and poverty.

We here in America have our own desert and mountain states and our water shortage problems. California is seventy-five percent such terrain. Nevada is a sagebrush desert with little water. There are several other such states.

If we want to maintain a respectable standard of living, we must put a stop to immigration and allow nations that refuse to deal with their problems to suffer the consequences.

Politicizing

WASHINGTON—Out of the dismal swamp that passes for a presidential campaign there has crawled the issue of appointments to the Supreme Court. It is an issue marked by sleazy politicizing.

For the problems confronting the Supreme Court and the lower federal tribunals can only be met by judges of high intellectual caliber. Those, by definition, are persons who stand above the mean, partisan politics of the day.

Jimmy Carter personally raised the issue first when he spoke to the NAACP convention in Miami on July 4. "I want you to consider very carefully and very seriously," he told the assembled black leaders, "how this nation's future will be affected by the next three or four justices of the U.S. Supreme Court."

In case anybody doubted his meaning, the president declared that he had appointed "more blacks, more women and more Hispanics to the federal bench as judges than all other presidents in the 200-year history of this country." In other words, the president was intimating that several justices were likely to leave the court soon, and strongly implying that he would name replacements sympathetic to the claims of women and racial minorities.

Ronald Reagan had the issue forced upon him by his party. The Republican convention wrote into the platform a plank committing the nominee to "the appointment of judges...who respect traditional family values and the sanctity of innocent human life."

To his credit, Governor Reagan edged away from the commitment against naming as judges persons who supported abortion. In an interview with the Associated Press, he said he would not use "single issues" as the test of judicial appointments. Still, he did not repudiate the naming of judges for partisan political reasons.

In fact, the hopes and fears on both sides are wildly exaggerated. There is no sign that the court headed by Chief Justice Warren Burger is about to sell out to the arch-conservatives. The Burger Court has upheld liberal principles on such matters as school desegregation, including busing, the death penalty, affirmative action in hiring, and the right to an abortion. While two liberal justices—William Brennan and Thurgood Marshall—have talked of retiring, both would probably hang on if Reagan were elected.

On the other hand, there is no sign that the Burger Court has sold out the ultra-liberals. It has, in particular, rejected wholesale translation of liberal economic views into sacred constitutional dogma. Hence the willingness of the Burger Court to defer to the Congress on federal funding of abortions.

The serious trouble confronting the court is the opposite of bias in one direction or another. The true difficulty lies in its inability to fashion unequivocal principles from which follow coherent opinions flashing clear signals.

A study by Bruce Fein for the American Enterprise Institute shows an extraordinary recent increase in the number of cases settled by a one-vote majority, or where there was a plurality of views and no majority. Justice Lewis Powell has acknowledged the fragmentation of views by asserting publicly that the "Court may fairly be criticized for the increase in the number of dissenting and concurring opinions." In the absence of clear signals from the Supreme Court, authority passes down the judicial ladder to the lower courts. These tribunals, lacking guidance from above, now strike out on their own in different directions.

Note, for example, the variety among the busing plans handed down by judges for Los Angeles, Chicago and Dallas. Packing the court with liberals or conservatives could of course upset the narrow balance that it now obtains. But not for long. If one president tilts the court sharply in one direction, it is a near certainty that the next will tilt the court sharply the other way. In each case, decisions will lack respect and the cure will be worse than the disease. The only way to move past the present knife edge in jurisprudence is by the development of transcendent principles that marshal growing assent. The discovery and articulation of such principles requires detached thought by long-headed statesmen of the law. What the court needs now is not passionate commitment to short-term partisan interests, but the kind of independent intellectual penetration that enabled John Marshall and Oliver Wendell Holmes and Benjamin Cardozo to assert an influence that has widened steadily long, long after time made moot particular cases and causes.

Under Sadat's Leadership

Egyptian President Anwar Sadat, who has taken over as his own prime minister, now faces a "prosperity war." Sadat has suspended the protracted talks with Israel regarding West Bank-Gaza Strip autonomy in favor of attending to Egypt's own severe problems.

A consumer boom already is under way, involving clothes, Western luxuries, television sets and other items. People are better-dressed; there are more and better quality shops and more public buses; sidewalks have been paved and overpasses completed; buildings are under construction, sewers and waterpipes are being repaired and telephones work.

Much Nasser-confiscated property has been returned. Merchants' funds are coming out of hiding, and foreign investors are spending about $3 billion in Egyptian long-term investments.

But Egypt's boom fails to reach the overwhelming majority of Egyptians. Many still earn less than the state-imposed minimum wage, which has been increased from $22 to $30 a month. Egypt's annual inflation rate runs at about 20 percent. Sadat is responsible for a general wage increase of 10 to 20 percent, and he recently gave low-salaried state employees a 30 percent cost-of-living bonus. He has reduced basic food prices and lowered the price of textiles and other commodities.

Government subsidies, already very big, have risen, and there are vigorously enforced price controls; black-marketing is severely punished. Bonuses and welfare benefits have been increased, and by the end of 1980, some taxes will be reduced. Social Security covers about 45 percent of Egypt's working force, and it will be extended to all Egyptians. All university students who have graduated in the last three years will be given government jobs if they are unable to find employment in private companies.

For the past seven years, Egyptian food production actually declined. The government rations 29 basic commodities, fixes prices through a cooperative grocery system, and spends about $700 million annually on subsidies. But the subsidies are abused. For example, many Egyptians have stopped baking bread, since farmers find it more profitable to sell their wheat to the state and buy subsidized bread.

Meanwhile, Sadat has focused on his own "green revolution." To increase food production, he directed that millions of desert acres be cultivated. For the first time in history, he gave Nubian farmers the titles to their land. He also awarded prizes to fishermen for catches on 350-square-mile Lake Nasser, located behind the Aswan Dam. In addition, Sadat instituted sugar-producing factories, fertilizer plants, poultry stations and cattle farms.

But Egypt still has its problems. It has a territory of 39,640,000 square miles—as large as Texas and New Mexico combined—but about 96 percent of this is arid. Most of Egypt's 39.7 million people are farmers, crammed into a seven-mile-wide strip of cultivated land running about 500 miles on both sides of the Nile.

During my last visit to Cairo, Sadat told me: "Of Egypt's many problems, population is the most agonizing and severe. Agriculture and industry simply cannot create enough jobs." The Egyptian government itself is the country's largest employer, supporting an incredibly immense bureaucracy. Some government offices requiring about 500 people are staffed with two or three times that number.

Sadat struggles with these built-in problems. He had promised that peace with Israel would bring Egypt material well-being, but much remains to be done.

The Incumbent's Advantage

WASHINGTON — In any presidential campaign, the man in the White House has an advantage over his challengers. An incumbent president has the power, the perks and the purse strings.

He can call a press conference for an announcement that will make him look good; or use Air Force One for a supposedly non-political trip to an important state; or hand out federal grants to critical election battlefields.

Jimmy Carter demonstrated his skill at presidential gamesmanship in his successful primary races against Senator Ted Kennedy. Any time Kennedy threatened to get the next day's headlines or a spot on the evening news, Carter could undercut him with a hastily arranged, camera-grabbing event. Local governments also found themselves wallowing in federal grants and suddenly announced aid programs on the eve of the primaries.

Meanwhile, the latest polls have Jimmy Carter and Ronald Reagan in a dead heat. But Reagan may be gaining the momentum. Our sources have seen the latest public opinion samplings. The next published polls will show Reagan about four percentage points ahead of the president.

Reagan is showing strength in a number of big states that Carter won in 1976. Reagan is even undercutting Carter in the South. But even worse news for the Carter campaign is coming from New York.

It will be difficult for the president to win re-election without carrying New York State. This makes the Liberal Party's endorsement crucial. The endorsement has gone, not to Carter, but to independent John Anderson. This might give Anderson enough respectability in New York to win the votes of disgruntled Kennedy Democrats.

The Liberal Party has never failed to endorse a Democratic candidate for president. But incredibly, the party leaders got the brushoff from the Carter camp. Carter's aides treated the Liberal leaders with an arrogance that bordered on contempt. The Liberals pleaded with Carter to listen to their complaints. They sent a 15-page memo to the White House detailing their grievances.

Carter's reply was a routine rehash of his administration's accomplishments. The president also assigned his domestic policy adviser, Stuart Eizenstat, to smooth the Liberals' ruffled feathers. But Carter's inner circle boasted that they didn't need New York to win.

The president's Georgia boys were whistling "Dixie," which they realized at the last minute. They tried to get New York Governor Hugh Carey and AFL-CIO President Lane Kirkland to plead the president's case with the Liberal Party leaders. But by then, it was too late.

HEADLINES AND FOOTNOTES: Secretary of State Ed Muskie is fuming behind the closed doors at the State Department about the way the Carter White House has treated him. His biggest gripe is that he has been excluded from major policy changes. Our sources say Muskie has served notice on the White House that he will depart the next time a policy decision is made without his input. Muskie's close friends say he is also thinking about leaving right after the election — no matter who wins.

The Nuclear Regulatory Commission is under orders from Congress to disclose the routes taken by shipments of nuclear waste across the country. But the commission has gotten around the order by classifying the information on such shipments as proprietary — in other words, it's a commercial secret. But it's really an open secret because anyone, including potential terrorists, can spot the waste shipments easily. The 30-ton containers are carried in open flatbed trucks and are clearly labeled "radioactive" in large yellow letters.

Even though the White House has organized a multimillion-dollar aid package for the auto industry, the automakers want more. The industry giants are taking aim at the federal rules establishing passive restraints that will soon be required on American cars. General Motors also wants the government to stop its series of crash tests comparing the crash-worthiness of different cars.

While the Senate investigates Billy Carter's activities as a foreign agent for Libya, the House of Representatives has been quietly seeking ways to prevent future "Billygates." One proposal introduced by a New York legislator will prohibit anyone in the immediate families of the president, the vice president, Cabinet members or congressmen from acting as agents for foreign governments.

Academic Senate Report

was on the whole a fair and judicious report." He added, "Some things I agree with and some things I don't agree with. I'm prepared to live with it."

A major point of contention with English Department complainants, according to the committee report, is their claim that the chancellor did not consult with department members either systematically or sufficiently to give him a valid basis for judgement.

Furthermore some department members claim that Huttenback's alleged lack of adequate consultation constitutes "a violation of their rights and privileges as members of the Academic Senate, on the grounds that the actions were taken unilaterally and without warning, providing none of the opportunities for consultation that are required by rule and by long-established usage."

The committee report points out that university regulations require the chancellor to consult with tenured department members before appointing department chairs and that professors and instructors shall be allowed to vote on "substantial department questions."

"While no university statute specifically limits the power of the chancellor to decide on non-retention of a chairperson," the report concluded, "the spirit of the regulations, fortified by long-established practice of shared governance within the University of California, requires systematic consultation with the department on non-reappointment decisions, and this was not done."

"The question is how much consultation is enough," Huttenback said. "The problems are more complicated for non-renewal than for appointment."

"The rules of the university as written, were not violated," the chancellor said.

On Aug. 14, Huttenback wrote a letter of response to the Privilege and Tenure Committee and the English Department that stated, "In order to facilitate the re-establishment of normal administrative processes, I accept the criticism (given in the report) and wish to apologize for whatever pain I have caused the department or any individuals within it."

In the letter, Huttenback reaffirmed his determination to "enhance the stature" of the English Department. "I am prepared, with appropriate consultation, to commit the necessary resources to this goal."

In a related item, the UCSB chapter of the American Association of University Professors will meet tomorrow afternoon to discuss the AAUP's report on the Carroll case released last week.

One of the activities of the Student Hunger Action Group is participation in the Santa Barbara-based Los Ninos program which delivers food to the needy in Mexico.

SHAG Works to Educate People on World Hunger

By SEAN UPTON
Nexus Staff Writer

The Student Hunger Action Group at UCSB is seeking support from students and the community for its humanitarian efforts to end world hunger.

Many events have been planned for this year to raise funds and educate others on the subject of hunger and the need for immediate action.

"The purpose of SHAG is two-fold," Ron Blacker, campus co-ordinator of the group, said. He explained that SHAG tries to "make people aware by informing them about hunger," and works directly toward helping hunger victims through food drives and fund-raising activities.

At the group's first meeting Wednesday night, spokesperson Tom Johnson welcomed new members, outlined this year's agenda, and summarized last year's activities, remarking that the programs had been so successful that SHAG intends to sponsor similar events for 1980-81.

This fall SHAG will hold a trick-or-treat for UNICEF, collecting money for the humanitarian organization. They will also continue broadcasting their talk show, "Focus on Hunger," on KCSB every Thursday from 12:15-1:00 p.m. The program begins Oct. 9th with a live broadcast from Storke Plaza, sponsored by the Community Affairs Board. Blacker and Johnson will co-host the program.

SHAG also plans to continue working with Los Ninos, a community organization that holds food drives for the children of Tijuana, to feed and educate them on the importance of a balanced meal. Three excursions to Tijuana are planned for this year.

World Hunger Week, Jan. 26-30, will include such SHAG-sponsored events as a dorm fast that gives students the option of forfeiting one meal and donating the money saved to buy food for hunger victims, and possibly a rock benefit to raise money for UNICEF, in conjunction with A.S. Concerts, Blacker said.

SHAG's activities also include the sponsoring of a 12-year-old boy from Brazil. The group sends $18 per month which provides for food, clothing and medical costs.

Also concerned with hunger-awareness is "The Sociology of Hunger," Soc 194, a new course offered by the Sociology Department in which students can earn four units researching and discussing the nature of hunger. The course, taught by Professor Morris Friedell, who is assisted by Blacker, meets Thursdays from 7-9 p.m.

For further information on the class or SHAG, contact Ron Blacker at 968-0395, or attend the group's next meeting Wed. at 5:15 p.m. in UCen 2272.

Wastes Studied

For 26 years, the federal government dumped thousands of barrels full of radioactive waste off the nation's shores. Now scientists and politicians are trying to decide what threat this poses to man.

A congressional committee meets Tuesday to hear testimony on what—if any—nuclear danger lurks beneath the sea amid reports that the barrels are leaking and may be poisoning fish.

One scientist says federal surveys "furnish compelling evidence that radioactive contamination has entered edible fish and now presents a measurable health hazard."

In 1946, federal agencies began dumping drums of nuclear waste off the Atlantic and Pacific coasts. The program ended in 1972, but probably at least 100,000 barrels are in various states of disintegration at some 50 sites on the sea floor.

A 1954 report by the Atomic Energy Commission says, "It began as an infrequent, garbage-disposal type of operation. Drums of low-level contaminated trash simply were taken out to a convenient location and put overboard."

Many Students Confront Housing Shortage at UCSB

By KAREN CLABEAUX
Nexus Staff Writer

UCSB apartments and dorm rooms have had a few extra inhabitants over the past two weeks, due to the annual housing shortage problem for university students.

"Approximately 200 to 300 people a day have come into the Community Housing Office for help in finding places to live," CHO Director Joan Mortell said. "This year has made us realize it's a lot tougher to find suitable housing than ever before."

Considerably more students have encountered the housing crunch this year, especially freshmen and graduate students who enrolled late for the quarter. Foreign students also have difficulties as they have no way to find housing before their arrival in this country, Mortell said.

"Santa Inez Apartments have helped the situation and Francisco Torres no longer rents to Santa Barbara City College students," Mortell said. Nevertheless, the off-campus dorms of Tropicana Gardens, Fontainebleu, and Francisco Torres were all filled a month earlier this year than in past, she added.

Although the problem persists for many, students can find help throughout the year at both the housing office on campus, and the Isla Vista Human Relations Center on Embarcadero del Mar.

CHO supplies students with a series of informational sheets compiled to aid the renter with everything from leasing and subleasing to rental deposit disputes.

"Education is important too. As limited as they are, renters do have rights and need to know them," CHO student advisor Mer Silvio commented. "Lots of times problems with landlords can be solved by sitting down and reasoning with them."

Services such as free telephone for local calls and bulletin board space for apartment and housing listings are available at CHO. During the past week, media coverage of the housing shortage problem created many offers of renting space in private homes by a responsive Santa Barbara community, according to Martell.

The CHO also offers counseling and meditation services through the six student advisors and the regular CHO staff. Advisory sessions are conducted in both on and off-campus dorms to discuss the procedure and costs involved in renting in Isla Vista.

The Isla Vista Human Relations Center also serves as a student and community service point for CHO by providing individual counseling, forums, and seminars, communication and assertiveness training, and information regarding the various legal and economic aspects of housing in I.V.

"If tenants have a complaint, we try to follow up on it and provide information on how to solve it," center spokeswoman Diane Cooper said. "But we're not just for tenants, we try to facilitate and improve relationships between tenants and landlords and roommates too."

"We at the Human Relations Center believe that many problems among roommates, problems with managers and owners, and problems with habitability and repairs can be handled in a relatively conflict-free atmosphere," the center states in their informational pamphlet.

The center offers advising by two Community Housing Office student advisors as well as their regular staff. For information or help with housing problems contact the CHO at 961-4371 and the Isla Vista HRC at 961-3922.

Woman Gains Monies in Discrimination Suit Ruling

(CPS) — In one of the few racial discrimination cases ever filed against a predominantly-black college, a federal judge has ruled that Dillard University unfairly paid one of its faculty members less because she is white.

Caroline Fisher became one of the 21 whites on Dillard's 74-member faculty in 1975, soon after earning her doctorate in psychology at Bowling Green. In 1977, however, she learned that two of her black colleagues in the Psychology Department at Dillard were earning nearly $16,000 per year while she got only $13,900, though she had similar duties.

After two and a half years of complaints and litigation, Federal Judge Fred Cassibry has ordered Dillard to pay Fisher — now a public school psychologist in Louisiana — $11,127 in back pay, and $60,000 in personal and punitive damages.

But George Strickler, Fisher's attorney and a faculty member at Tulane Law School, emphatically refused to assess the Fisher case as part of larger, growing body of case law about "reverse discrimination."

"This was absolutely not a precedent-setting case," Strickler said. "It's just a garden-variety racial discrimination case."

By her first observations, the bleak cement walls of the Isla Vista Friendship Manor reminded receptionist Christine Swett of a prison. Once she began working at the retirement home, however, she discovered a milieu of "love (and) caring feelings."

The formidable white-block structure located at 6647 El Colegio Rd. is a state-registered retirement home. With an average age of about 80, the manor houses approximately 240 seniors. To qualify for residency, one must be at least 62 and largely self-sufficient. Friendship Manor is not a convalescent or nursing home, Activities Director Shirley Major stressed.

"Totally funded by the residents who pay for their room and board, Friendship Manor provides no level of medical care whatsoever," manor administrator Denise Maurice explained.

"It's for the active retired people. They must be able to take care of themselves. Even the physical part of the building is not geared to the handicapped," Major added.

Overseen by a nine-member board of directors, several of whom are pastors (interdenominational, but all Christian) the manor is the only retirement home in I.V. There are, however, "seniors living in apartment complexes scattered throughout Isla Vista," Maurice said.

Friendship Manor has its own bureaucracy headed by the Volunteer Special Services Council of which Major is the director. Below the VSSC is a hierarchy of councils and groups run almost entirely by residents. "We're striving for a residents-governed home here," Major said. Among the groups are floor representative and a branch of the California Association for Housing of the Aged.

"The VSSC is Friendship Manor's auxiliary which provides entertainment, educational programs, counseling, and chaplain services in a manner designed to further the ideals and objectives of the manor," Major said.

Major, who has been with the manor since 1975, said the resident home seeks to provide an atmosphere conducive to resident involvement.

"Involved people are healthy people. The opportunities are provided, nothing is mandatory. They're going to be alive as long as they live. And that's the whole purpose here," Major said.

"We have a rental consultant," Major continued, "who tells people flatly when they come in: 'You're not here to retire, you're here to retread.' And that's it. You don't have to come here and die, you don't have to come here and be 'old' and have people feel sorry for you and be left alone to your own misery. It doesn't happen here. Only if they choose that to happen, and we do have some sourpusses here, but it's their choice."

Controversy over draft registration continues as the Selective Service System's figures on compliance are contested by anti-draft groups.

Family Service Task Force Formed To Establish Child Guidance Clinic

By JULIE MIESBAUER
Nexus Staff Writer

The Family Service Agency recently initiated the formation of a Child Guidance Task Force that will work to establish a child guidance clinic in Santa Barbara.

"There has been expressed need by psychologists and psychiatrists for back-up support and by families for more services," Sheridan Gerard, chair of the task force, said. "There are no clinics in the area providing extensive health services for children and many of them are being referred out of the area."

"The proposed clinic," Allan R. Cutting, executive director of the Family Service Agency said, "will supplement and compliment the existing mental health services at the agency." If the clinic is adopted, the present staff, which includes a child play therapist, will be expanded to include a "board-certified child psychiatrist, clinical psychologists, social workers and other disciplines. The new program will also provide diagnosis, treatment, consultation and community education," Cutting said.

Due to cutbacks imposed by Proposition 13, all previous attempts by the city to establish extensive children's mental health services have failed. However, Cutting is "99 percent sure" that this program will be adopted.

Cutting also has "a longer range goal of the clinic becoming a teaching clinic, utilizing UCSB graduate students from the traditional mental health disciplines." Because there is a large influx of families from I.V. wanting services, there are tentative plans for an outreach clinic.

A wide-range of people use the clinic, paying for services according to their financial situation. The available treatment is play therapy, in which a child acts out his or her problems by playing. This is often more effective than conventional treatments because it transcends the problem of the child's limited vocabulary, according to Cutting. "The new program, however, will emphasize early prevention," he said.

The clinic can begin operations as soon as the task force submits the needed information from the finance, community assessment and program subcommittees to the board of directors of the Family Service Agency. The 60-member task force, consisting of professionals from education, law enforcement, criminal justice, mental services, recreation and other such disciplines, have tentatively planned to present their final report in December.

"If the Board gives its approval, the months of January, February and March will be dedicated to seeking funds from private foundations," Cutting said.

The Family Service Agency is located at 800 Santa Barbara St. Established in 1899, it is the oldest social service agency in the area.

Number of Draft Registrants Grow Though Opponents Claim Success

By NEILL STOKES
Nexus Staff Writer

Conflicting estimates of the number of draft-age men has split anti-draft registration activists.

The Selective Service System has estimated that 3.9 million men were required to register, resulting in a 94 percent compliance record for last July's registration, according to SSS Assistant Director Brayton Harris.

Anti-draft forces claim that preliminary census reports are incomplete and thus the SSS estimates are inaccurate, Dave Henson, of the UCSB-based Coalition To Stop The Draft, said.

However, Barry Lynn, executive director of the Committee Against Registration and the Draft, gave an estimate of 3.8 million at a subcommittee meeting of the House Judiciary Committee last spring, thus undermining the accusations of his colleagues, Harris claimed.

Henson denied that the anti-draft activist's claims are erroneous. "I don't agree with Lynn's estimate," he said.

"The figures Selective Service are basing the compliance percentages on are false," Henson continued. "The figures are based on the census, which is totally erroneous. I hesitate to say they're lying, but until an independent study is performed, I don't trust their figures."

Henson went on to state that the Selective Service and its calculations are influenced by the Carter administration, and are therefore invalid. "If the president wants to get re-elected this is a crucial victory for him, and he knows that. He needs to show that the nation supports him, not only for re-election but also to gain prestige in the eyes of the world."

Harris, denying that the president influences Selective Service's findings, said, "Though we report directly to the president, Congress makes the rules that dictate our procedure."

"The estimate of those required to register is based on the number of men born in 1960 and 1961, minus those institutionalized or already in the military," Harris said. "We keep up to date with the yearly censuses, but we aren't using the 1980 census; the information isn't ready yet."

"At present, we have a 94 percent compliance rate and more registration forms coming in every day," Harris reported. "We have invited the General Accounting Office to examine our calculations and methodology — they're doing it now. I personally invite anyone who disagrees with our figures to submit their own for audit. We are not speculating or fabricating — we can't."

However, the Boston Globe, which sampled districts across the country, found non-compliance averaging about 25 percent nationwide, with about a million draft age men failing to register.

The survey also found that non-registration was higher in some cities than in others. In the Baltimore area, for example, 31 percent failed to register and in the Chicago area it was about 25 percent. Draft registration didn't even go over well in Peoria, Ill., where non-compliance was estimated to be about 47 percent.

When he was last reached, Santa Barbara Postmaster Gene Howard estimated 50 percent of draft age men in this area have not registered.

"Our main strategy is to educate students at UCSB so they can make the proper choice, to question what's really going on," Henson said.

"Registration leads to the draft, which leads to war," Henson continued. "At first, Carter's motivation for instituting the draft registration was primarily political, but now with the Iran-Iraq conflict, the possibility of war over Persian Gulf oil is becoming a reality. We want to get the point across that a war is not in the people's best interest, but rather in the interest of maintaining U.S. control over third world resources."

The Coalition To Stop The Draft, which spawned both the statewide organization Students Against The Draft and the Santa Barbara Coalition Against War And The Draft, presents rallies with guest speakers, draft counseling, educational forums, and films with discussion afterwards, according to Henson.

There is also disagreement between government officials and activists concerning the very status of the anti-draft registration movement. "The supposed controversy over draft registration has fallen off in big chunks. I know because I've spoken at campuses all over the country and I've seen the changing reactions," Harris said.

"The world is different today than it was in the late '60s and early '70s," Harris commented. "Problems that were germane then are not germane now. Anti-draft supporters forget that they won the battle in the early '70s. In 1971, Congress made major changes in the draft selection laws."

The assertion that the movement is lagging was denied by Henson. "It really ticks me off when the media labels the anti-draft registration movement as a token movement," he said. "Because we're not extremist, burning down buildings and so forth, we don't attract as much attention. During draft registration week, we had all the post offices covered every day. That's what I call an effective anti-draft registration movement. We're organized."

Landowners Sue for New Hearing

At the same time, anti-LNG organizations were coming into being throughout southern California. Their reasons for opposition included a desire to protect and preserve a beautifully unspoiled area of coastline, the possibility of a major accident, and the reduction of property values that would result in surrounding areas in the event of construction of the terminal.

In addition, much of the land in the Pt. Conception area is used for cattle ranching, and Bixby Ranch and Hollister Ranch officials have voiced concern over the hazards presented by construction of an LNG terminal near their ranges.

After it was discovered that Cojo Bay lay along a faultline, Western LNG dug trenches at the proposed site in May 1978 to study the seismic situation.

At this point, the Chumash Indians, for whom Pt. Conception is a sacred burial ground and the "Western Gate" through which souls pass on their way to the next world, intervened. They brought the trenching to a halt by physically occupying the area. The incident sparked protest rallies and demonstrations, and there were some arrests.

Indians and LNG proponents reached an agreement, and trenching has continued through June of this year. There has been no construction since then, according to Bob Whitney of the Santa Barbara Indian Center.

On Aug. 28, 1979, the United States Air Force petitioned the FERC, opposing Pt. Conception as a terminal site because it would lie in the path of missiles launched from nearby Vandenberg Air Force base. In the event of missile malfunction or some other mishap, the effects could be disastrous.

However, on Sept. 21, 1979, Air Force Secretary Hans Mark withdrew his opposition, saying that an agreement had been reached and the safety questions answered.

On Sept. 26, 1979, the ERA granted conditional approval of the Indonesian project, and indicated a preference for Oxnard as the terminal site. That same day, the FERC voted 4-0 in favor of siting at Pt. Conception.

The next day, the Department of Energy removed the ERA from the project, thereby leaving sole authority in the matter with the FERC.

These decisions made on and after Aug. 28, 1979 alarmed Bixby officials, and prompted them to launch an investigation into the causes thereof. Those investigations resulted in the motions to re-open filed by Bixby last month.

Senior Citizens at Friendship Manor

"All this marvelous alive living is available to them and it's not a made up 'let's do something because it has to be done' kind of thing," Major said. "It's genuinely there and has a purpose. At a welcoming party I always tell the new residents, 'I could sit and plan all kinds of marvelous things for you to do, but I'm not going to do it. I want you to come to me with the things that you want to do. I want to help you do it.' Here they have a voice."

Residents have proven their capabilities in running almost all of the manor's services and clubs. Monica Sherlock manages the Manor Beauty Shop. Bill Pope provides carpool excursions to local shopping centers and doctor offices. His wife, Genevieve, coordinates Saturday night dances. The Papes have been at the manor for five years and said they still "enjoy it."

Ray Philipson serves as the manor librarian, in which books are lent on the honor system. Sue Heard leads swimming exercises at the manor pool twice a week. Part-time pastor Henry Coray offers help to the sick and leads prayers. The resident barber is Bill Gunn, who says he's willing to take "emergency calls."

Residents may engage in sports such as bocce ball, horseshoes, shuffleboard or ping pong. There's bingo, dances, movies, slide shows, boutique, crafts, and hobby workshops for the industrious. The manor also has its own "General Store," stocking everything from Band-Aids to bananas.

Residents' response to activities and life in general is very positive, Major said. Violet Perkins, for example, does an imitation of the "old" people, mocking their gestures and creaky voices. However, Kay Smith found becoming involved difficult because "groups don't make you feel welcome. They're cliques." Most others interviewed felt that it was a matter of attitude, getting out only as much as one puts in.

The primary goal for the upcoming year is to extend Friendship Manor out into the community, to foster increased communication and involvement between the manor and Isla Vista and UCSB.

"The seniors, like any other group of people, is such a marvelous resource group," Maurice said. "The ones who we have here could offer the community a lot. One of the pitfalls of coming into any type of institution is that you pretty much stay within your own walls. But it's time now, having been here for seven years. We have a very active Residents' Council and right now they're trying to educate themselves for the White House Conference on Aging (1981)— to see if there's any way we can participate."

"I think our residents on the whole are becoming more aware that there is a responsibility to the community that you live in, for the people who come after you," Maurice added.

Manor residents are connected to UCSB students in several ways, according to Maurice. The manor used to be known as The College Inn, a housing for students much like Francisco Torres, but not as high in the air. Prudentail, who owned the property, found toward the end of the '60s and early '70s that the style of living was not that popular among students. The College Inn was having financial difficulties and Prudentail made the property available.

"They were going to level it, as I understand," Maurice continued, "if no one picked the property up. So Christian Service Inc. came in, looked it over, and had remodeling done. The rooms basically stayed the same. The food system (cafeteria-style) was kept much the same, much like Francisco Torres, or the Tropicana, or Fon-tainebleu."

A good number of the 35 part-time employees come from Dos Pueblos High School and UCSB. "They've been nothing but a delight," manor resident Celine Kingey said of the UCSB student employees. "They have a different attitude toward older people now than back when I was in school. It seems we had no time for anyone over 25."

The manor administration encourages students to become involved. They have held "tea" get-togethers and have been receptive to student and community group assistance. Last year they sponsored an "Adopt-a-Grandparent" program which was highly successful, according to Major.

"You only grow older on the outside," Major said. "Things aren't done for the 'poor old folks,' the folks are doing it themselves on their own initiative. And that's what it's all about."

Alpine Ski Trip Slated

For the tenth year, the University of Nevada at Reno and many other California colleges will offer their popular winter package to the French and Swiss Alps. Departures are scheduled for Dec. 18-Jan. 3, Dec. 20-Jan. 3 and Jan. 24-Feb 6, to coincide with school breaks.

Me, take another exam? Are you crazy???

Q. The Navy Officer Qualification Test (NOQT) is a piece of cake, right?

A. Not necessarily.

If you're majoring in engineering or another technical area, we would expect you to do better on the test than an Inner Monglian Cultural Arts major, but you won't hear us telling anyone that the test is easy. The NOQT is an aptitude exam dealing with number and letter comparison, instrument interpretation, word analogy, practical judgement, mathematical reasoning, and mechanical comprehension involving gears, levers, pulleys, fluids, etc. For those interested in an aviation program, there is an extra section dealing with aircraft orientation.

The Navy Officer Information Team will be administering the test in the Placement Office, Bldg. 427, during campus visit Oct. 8, 9, and 10.

Tests will be scored immediately and an Officer will be available to discuss your results and the various programs you may want to consider.

Taking the exam in no way obligates you to the Navy, but it just might tell you something about yourself. Come in and give it a shot - you might even pass.

Women Sweep USD; Irvine Proves Tougher

The UCSB women's volleyball team opened its weekend doubleheader with a three-game sweep of the University of San Diego 15-2, 15-7, 15-1 on Friday night. This was the first Southern California Athletic Association match for the Gauchos, who are seeking their fourth straight division crown.

Saturday night proved to be quite a different story when the spikers traveled north to meet the Anteaters of U.C. Irvine. The match went to the limit of five games before Santa Barbara added another win to improve their record to 14-1. The Gauchos, who had dropped just three games (not matches) all year, almost matched that total in the win over Irvine. The game scores were 12-15, 15-5, 15-5, 7-15, 15-1.

In Friday's victory at San Diego, UCSB played "close to perfect" volleyball according to Gaucho head coach Kathy Gregory. The match was only the second played away from home for Santa Barbara. The Gauchos' only loss this year came in the San Diego Invitational last month to first-ranked USC.

U.C. Irvine always seems to give UCSB trouble when they host the Gauchos. Saturday night was no exception. The Anteaters had just lost three straight to Cal Poly San Luis Obispo the night before, so they had nothing to lose and played relaxedly. The Gauchos were overdue for a close match and the effects of their first road trip were evident.

"Irvine played good and dug the ball well," Gregory said. "We served and passed miserably in the games we lost." Despite the poor play of the Gauchos, Gregory was confident that her club could win. "I didn't think we would lose if it went five games."

Setter Lisa Denker played outstandingly for UCSB in Saturday night's win. Anne Hansen, who has been the sparkplug for the Gauchos this year, contributed another strong game in helping her team up its SCAA mark to 2-0.

Poloists Drop Two To Stanford, CAL

After winning their first two games in the American Water Polo Coaches Tournament at Stanford last weekend, UCSB suffered with poor defensive play during the last two contests as they allowed a total of 23 goals in their two losing efforts.

The losses came at the hands of two of the nation's top water polo schools, Stanford and CalBerkeley. Stanford stopped the Gauchos Friday 12-4 with CalBerkeley also managing to hit double figures Saturday in an 11-6 victory.

Gaucha coach Pete Snyder warned his club about the importance of defense before the season started and they are just learning now that when you allow 8 to 10 goals a game you will come out on the losing end. "Our defense is allowing way too many goals," Snyder said. "We keep having breakdowns in communication. There is no talk out there."

With the two losses, UCSB dropped to 7-4 for the season. In Friday's action, Pat Yates led the win over CalState Hayward by scoring five goals. Next the Gauchos dropped Cal's "B" team 8-6, with Yates leading the scoring again with three. Freshman Lawrence Mouchawar added two goals. In the loss to Stanford, UCSB fell behind 7-3 at the half and could not overcome that deficit. Mark Shamshoian scored two Guacho goals.

Saturday the Santa Barbara poloists faced Cal for the second time in three days. Last Thursday, the Bears downed the Gauchos 10-8 at the Berkeley pool. This time it was at Stanford's pool with not much change in the result — an 11-6 Berkeley win.

"We should have been ahead at the end of the first quarter," Snyder recalled. "At half we were only down by two before we totally collapsed in the third quarter. But you can't take anything away from Cal; they are a good team and play well together."

Despite the loss to Cal, UCSB still managed to place third in the tournament. Cal won it with Stanford finishing second and the surprising Santa Barbara "B" team getting fourth.

The Gaucho "B" squad played well throughout the weekend as they toppled U.C. Davis.

Kickers Capture Three in All-CAL

Coach John Purcell's UCSB soccer team went unbeaten in the All-California tournament over the weekend, winning two games by 3-0 scores and a third by forfeit.

The Gauchos were slated to meet U.C. Berkeley on Saturday but a combination of injuries and fatigue forced the Bears to withdraw. Friday, the kickers downed U.C. Davis in the first game. The following day U.C. Irvine fell victim to Santa Barbara by the same 3-0 score.

Gauchos Take All-Cal

The UCSB women's cross country team kept their unbeaten streak intact as they outran five other teams to win the All-Cal cross country championship at U.C. Davis last weekend.

Diane Karg captured first for the Gauchos (18:06), Julie Thrupp, third (18:40), Sarah Sweeney, fourth (18:44) and Melissa Martell, fifth (18:50).

The team scores for the 5,000-meter race were UCSB 23, U.C. Davis 48, U.C. Riverside 72, and U.C. Irvine 92.

U.C. Berkeley won the men's championship with 24 points, followed by U.C. Riverside (49) and UCSB (64).

State Gives Oil Pipeline Control to Private Industry

(Continued from front page) Four Corners, the segment will be about 19,000 feet long, and will run from Ellwood to the Aminoil Oil loading terminal at Coal Oil Point. This small section of the pipeline, which will take about one month to complete, will have provisions to allow easy connection with the main line when the main line is completed.

The building of the Ellwood-to-Coal Oil Point section, originally planned to begin in October, will be delayed until December due to the need to avoid several archaeological sites.

This section of the pipeline is designed to replace another line that is threatened with destruction by erosion. The SBDER gave Four Corners an emergency provision to install the pipeline, which allows the company to ignore normal environmental protection measures when the environment is threatened by a more immediate danger. The emergency provision was given to avoid a potential oil spill from the threatened pipe.

In spite of the emergency provision, archaeological consultant Jerry Moore said, the Four Corners Pipeline Company voluntarily used normal environmental protection measures, and found it necessary to delay construction to avoid three archaeological sites.

The sites, Moore said, include one actually at the Coal Oil Point leading terminal, and two along the right-of-way leading to the terminal.

The archaeological site at the loading terminal was essentially ruined by the construction of the site in the 1950s, Moore said. He added that to avoid further damage, the builders will use the existing line to enter the site.

The two other sites contain approximately one piece of archaeologically important material per 100 square meters, but as Moore explained, these light scatters on the surface could be an indication of more substantial material deeper in the ground. The pipeline's course will be changed to avoid these small sites.

The status of the Santa Barbara-to-L.A. pipeline project will be reviewed on Oct. 21, when the Santa Barbara Joint Government-Industry Pipeline Working Group will hold a meeting to discuss the current status of several onshore pipeline studies. The group includes members from local and state government and from various oil-related industries, and was originally formed to study the feasibility of the S.B.-to-L.A. pipeline.

When the Pipeline Working Group first proposed this pipeline, one of the problems it encountered was the lack of proper refinery capacity in Los Angeles. Because oil from the Santa Barbara area is thicker than foreign oil, many of the L.A. area refineries cannot refine the oil that will be coming in from the pipeline. The refineries can be retrofitted to handle the thicker oil however, and currently the Refinery Retrofit Task Force, an agency that is associated with the S.B. Pipeline Working Group, is aiding them in doing so.

Hart — Aquino Debate...

"I think I have a good demonstrated record of accessibility," Hart continued. "We have a well-trained staff that is courteous and responsive to the needs of the constituents."

Hart stressed the significance of endorsements that he has obtained from teacher, police and environmental groups. He ended his opening remarks by expressing his regret of not being able to pose and answer questions directed towards he and his opponent because the Aquino camp had refused to comply with this part of the original debate format.

"When you go to Sacramento to present legislation," Hart said, "you are posed with many questions and need the qualities of being able to answer these questions under pressure. Apparently, Mr. Aquino does not feel comfortable with that type of format."

Following the opening statements Kay began accepting questions from the audience directed to the candidates. Each candidate handled a question directed specifically at him, and then his opponent was allowed a rebuttal.

Aquino was first asked to elaborate on his claim that $250 million was disappearing from the Medi-Cal program each year. Aquino said that he knew that "one doctor had collected $20 million in abortions that weren't even needed."

Hart commented that there is certainly fraud in Medi-Cal, but that Aquino had not referred to his source of information and evidence, and that he found it difficult to believe that one doctor had obtained $20 million for abortion fees.

Aquino, in making a final statement on the question, corrected his original figure of $20 million to $2 million dollars, apologizing for the mistake. "I looked incorrectly at my figures," he said.

Hart's first question was from a member of the audience who, intimating that the majority of the people in Santa Barbara believe in capital punishment, asked why Hart had voted against it. "Gary Hart believes in government of Gary Hart, by Gary Hart, and for Gary Hart," the man said. "I do not believe in capital punishment," Hart responded.

When asked about the LNG Act and finding a site other than Point Conception, Hart said he would continue trying to convince the state and federal governments that another site should be found.

Aquino commented that his primary concern with the LNG plant is safety. "What we need to do," Aquino said, "is pass legislation that will go to the federal government with the state having a say and the community having a say."

Other questions that were briefly dealt with during the debate were questions of the routing of state water via a peripheral canal into Santa Barbara, the possibility of a future North and South County split because of rapidly growing population in the northern district, congested Highway 101 traffic in Santa Barbara and high school competency exams.

Aquino had just begun to make his concluding remarks when he received a fairly severe shock from the microphone. He was noticeably shaken as he moved away from the table and fell silent for a number of seconds. Aquino, still appearing a little stunned from the shock, expressed his gratitude to Kay for organizing the debate and to the audience for attending.

Personnel Files

The U.C. administration, while showing some concern about the possibility of affirmative action violations, seems to be even more concerned about a matter of internal university governments. Some administrators privately say that they aren't sure whether any violations have occurred, but that even if they have, the problems should be worked out within the departments themselves.

Administrators have always voiced a concern for the integrity of the departments and the Academic Senate, usually shunning any interference with academic matters. Even when the administration itself has disagreed with academic policy, it generally has been reluctant to impose its own solutions on the departments.

In the light of this reluctance, it is highly unlikely that the administration would put up with outside interference from anyone. And, since this is the first time a university has been the subject of an investigation by the Department of Labor that has become this advanced, it would not be surprising to see protracted litigation yet. Lee writes regularly for the Daily Cal, U.C. Berkeley.
