'Cheadle 200' Defendants Found Innocent

By Jason Ross
Staff Writer

In a surprising reversal of fortune, an appellate court late Thursday overturned the 1991 trespassing convictions of 10 protesters who occupied Cheadle Hall on the eve of the Persian Gulf War.

A panel of superior court judges found that Judge Henry Loberg gave an improper 11th-hour instruction to the jury during the trial last July.

The decision could reverse the convictions of as many as 180 protesters who plead no contest to misdemeanor charges stemming from a massive student sit-in on Jan. 15, 1991. 198 demonstrators, most of them students, were arrested at Cheadle Hall when they peacefully refused to leave the building at closing time.

"I'm elated and very happily surprised," said defendant Marina Bernheimer, 22, who graduated last fall.

"It's exciting for all of us who have spent the last two years in the paper-pushing process of the legal system. It's thrilling to be over."

The rare appellate reversal was a victory for local defense attorney Alison Adams, who represented the 10 students.

"I feel that my clients and the protesters with them have been completely vindicated," Adams said this weekend. "I'm just flying."

Prosecutor Gerry Franklin has said he will appeal the decision.

The decision on the so-called "Cheadle 200" case could mark the close of a tumultuous chapter in UCSB history, one that pitted the student defendants against UCSB administration and the legal system.

Adams had argued during the trial that her clients, enraged at the impending Gulf War, were exercising free speech at a time when drastic action was acceptable. She also called Chancellor Barbara Uehling to the witness stand in an attempt to show that her administration was unresponsive to student concerns.

Together, these factors gave the students lawful business in the building after hours, Adams argued. According to the state Penal Code, anyone with lawful business in a place is not trespassing.

Prosecutor Jeff Gittler and administration witnesses held that the protesters were practicing civil disobedience, and knew they were breaking the law.

When the jury, deliberating late into a Friday night, sent Loberg a question about the definition of lawful business, he replied that lawful business ended with the school day. The jury quickly found the defendants guilty.

Loberg had said throughout the proceedings that if any of the defendants were successful in trial or appeal, he would dismiss all the Cheadle 200 cases.

The appeals court found that, "because the jury was

Minority Enrollment Drops in Fall

However, Ethnic Diversity Among Transfer Students is at Record High

By Anita Miralle
Staff Writer

The percentage of minority students in this year's freshman class is the lowest it has been since Chancellor Barbara Uehling took office in 1987, despite pledges to increase the ethnic diversity of the campus.

After a serious decline last year, the percentage of minorities has gone down from 30.9% in the class matriculating in fall 1991 to 30.6% in the incoming class, although there was an overall increase in the number of students of color.

Based on Statements of Intent to Register received earlier this month, there are 976 minority students in the estimated class of 3,187 freshmen. While there were only 866 minorities among last year's freshmen, that class was 385 students lighter.

Minority enrollment among transfer students, however, has increased from 22.1% in last year's transfer class to 24.8% in this year's. The number of minority transfers enrolling this fall, 272, is the highest of Uehling's administration.

According to Director of Admissions and Relations William Villa, although these numbers seem low, they are reassuring. "I am disappointed with the enrollment statistics of underrepresented groups, and we don't understand why these numbers are not growing, but while the numbers are low, they are encouraging," Villa said.

Villa explained that every year the admissions office contacts each minority student who decides not to enroll at UCSB to determine what turned them away from the campus. The most frequent responses include the desire to stay at home and to save money or to go to school elsewhere with friends. Respondents also stated that professional schools would provide them with more opportunities than four-year institutions such as UCSB.

Villa explained that competition within the UC system for underrepresented students is fierce and when campuses such as Los Angeles and Berkeley are aggressively vying for minorities, UCSB gets looked over.

However, some activists on campus believe it is the ethnic make-up of the students here that deters diversity significantly.

"It's hard for minorities to come to a campus where there is not a lot of cultural awareness and there is not a willingness to be culturally aware," said Peter

Firefighters Keep Blazing Fire Near Hills Contained

A blazing fire that broke out over the weekend on the hills north of Lake Cachuma was contained by a control line Sunday after firefighters struggled with the blaze for 36 hours.

The fire erupted Friday across from Rancho Felicia in Happy Canyon, east of Highways 154 and 246. A fire line, to prevent the fire from spreading, was placed around the area by 6 a.m. Sunday. The inferno ravaged 2,200 acres of ranchland but no longer presents a threat, Santa Barbara County Fire officials said.

According to Ryan Hill, fire captain for the county fire department, the fire, which was reported at 2:40 p.m. Friday, could have been contained sooner. "An aircraft could have assisted in containing the fire, if it had been available during the initial phase of the firefighting," Hill said.

The nearby ranches west of the blaze have not yet been endangered by the fire, and no one has been evacuated, according to Hill. "While some watershed was threatened, the fire didn't seriously damage Lake Cachuma's watershed," Hill added.

About 500 firefighters, four fire engines, two handcrews, two helicopters and 40 overhead personnel were supplied by the United States Forest Service in Goleta, said Jim Bazemore, a dispatcher for the service.

Although no official word has been given as to what caused the fire, Chris Wieson, a county fire inspector, estimated that the cost to control the blaze would run as high as $1 million.

Politics and Play at Park to Present Party Platform

By Connie Stevens
Reporter

It was a hot, dry Saturday as Isla Vista residents gathered in Anisq' Oyo' Park to kick back with friends, listen to music and get in touch with local political candidates at the 21st Annual Isla Vista Fall Festival.

Approximately 1,500 visitors attended the festival, where entertainment by local bands was used to boost voter registration in time to beat the Oct. 3 deadline.

"The event was held to get people outside to focus on registering to vote and make students feel like they're part of the community," said Darcy Aston, recreation coordinator for the Isla Vista Recreation and Park District.

The festival, which was organized by the IVRPD, kicked off the daylong gala with the fearless guitar duo, Los Guys. The local band was one of five that performed at the festival, where more than 200 I.V. residents had registered to vote by the middle of the afternoon.

Organizers and participants alike agreed that Isla Vistans needed the chance to be informed about area candidates. Students were encouraged to vote on local issues, rather than employ absentee ballots from their hometowns, Aston said.

Santa Barbara County 3rd District Supervisor Bill Wallace was on hand to address student concerns during the concert. "I really think that if people vote, I.V. residents will get more attention and look like they care,"

Islamic Radical Party Against Middle Eastern Peace Talks

RAFAH, Occupied Gaza Strip (AP) —In the Al-Salam Mosque, whose name means "peace" in Arabic, a young man exhorted his listeners to wage holy war on Israel.

The gathering was one of the forums the Islamic Jihad movement has begun sponsoring in mosques in the Gaza Strip to argue against the Middle East peace talks.

Islamic Jihad, or Islamic Holy War, is the smallest but most radical of the parties urging the destruction of Israel and the founding of an Islamic state in its place. It preaches that Israel's existence is an affront to Islam.

Israeli authorities have arrested hundreds of Islamic Jihad activists during the 4-1/2-year-old Palestinian uprising, but the group continues to push its philosophy of violent opposition to Israel.

The Jihadists are trying to broaden their appeal by sponsoring discussions and rallies against the peace talks. The group was one of 10 factions behind a general strike last Wednesday in the occupied territories opposing the U.S.-sponsored talks.

"Nidal"
-member of Islamic Jihad

At the Al-Salam mosque in Rafah, a young man who called himself a Jihad warned about 60 listeners that the peace process, centered on Israel's offer of limited autonomy to Palestinians, was a trap.

"We are against autonomy because it gives Israel the chance to penetrate the Arab world in all areas of life," he said.

Another activist calling himself Nidal said: "We believe that Palestine is the fighting line between Islam and the forces of evil."

Both Islamic Jihad and Hamas, an acronym for Islamic Resistance Movement, are offshoots of the Muslim Brotherhood founded in Egypt in the 1920s. Both groups have been outlawed by Israel.

Despite its professed hatred of Israel, Hamas is believed ready to join in Palestinians under autonomy. Members of Islamic Jihad say they will keep up the violent struggle.

Islamic Jihad is said to have several thousand active supporters in Gaza and a sprinkling of members in the West Bank.

Nidal, 31, said that crowded, poverty-stricken Gaza was a far better recruiting ground than the better-off West Bank.

The strip has a population of about 750,000 Palestinians, a third of them living in squalid refugee camps. Its area of 444 square miles is about a fifth of that of the West Bank, which is home to about one million Palestinians.

Zulu Leader Refuses Peace Meetings with Government

KWAMASHU, South Africa (AP) —The country's second most powerful Black leader broke off talks with the government Sunday, dampening hopes that South Africa's political crisis can be resolved soon.

Mangosuthu Buthelezi, head of the Zulu-dominated Inkatha Freedom Party, made the announcement a day after his rival, African National Congress leader Nelson Mandela, met President F.W. de Klerk in a promising bid to restart Black-white negotiations.

There is little chance of a breakthrough without Buthelezi's participation.

In what was seen as the most positive development in three months, Mandela and de Klerk met Saturday and said they made substantial progress toward restarting negotiations the ANC broke off in June over mounting political violence.

Buthelezi, in an angry speech at a Zulu rally, said he and his Zulu followers had not been consulted and therefore would not abide by agreements reached between de Klerk and Mandela.

Buthelezi told 10,000 cheering supporters in Kwamashu, a Black township outside the eastern port city of Durban, that in his view, "negotiation for the future constitution for South Africa cannot go ahead."

Former Communist Leader Expected to Win Election

BUCHAREST, Romania (AP) —President Ion Iliescu, the former Communist that has ruled Romania since late 1989, outpolled his main reformist challenger in an election Sunday but failed to avoid a runoff, state TV projections showed.

The projections, based on an exit poll, also showed Iliescu's supporters holding probably the best chance to form a governing coalition, though in a highly fragmented parliament.

Iliescu was projected to capture 48% of the vote to 33% for the opposition Democratic Convention's candidate, Emil Constantinescu, a Bucharest University dean.

"I have every reason to believe I will win the second round," Iliescu, 62, told The Associated Press at his campaign headquarters.

If the projections prove accurate, said Constantinescu, 53, "Romania's situation will become very difficult, even traumatic."

The presidential and parliamentary elections Sunday were the second since the December 1989 revolution that toppled dictator Nicolae Ceausescu, and were considered a referendum on Iliescu.

Nominees' Aides Preparing to Woo Perot Supporters

DALLAS (AP) —President Bush said Sunday "just the truth will do it," when he sends top aides to woo Ross Perot's strongest supporters Monday.

And Bill Clinton says his envoys will make a "very straightforward, factual representation" to prove his plan is closer to Perot's. The nominees wanted to bring Perot supporters into their fold not only by selling Perot's 50 state coordinators on their respective economic plans, but also to smooth feelings ruffled after Perot abandoned his independent bid in July.

Neither candidate planned to attend Monday's meeting themselves.

If supporters of the Dallas billionaire don't believe the candidates are serious about deficit reduction, they'll want Perot back in, confounding the campaign in its final five weeks.

Since the meeting was announced, Perot has remained quiet about it. While many of his invited supporters say they will urge him to run, close associates to Perot say he prefers the role of political broker to candidate.

"He wants some answers too, I would assume," Charlie Hellebusch, Perot's Kentucky coordinator, said after arriving in Dallas. "He will make his own decision. Hopefully we'll help him."

Teachers Reach Agreement Allowing Return to Work

DETROIT (AP) —City school teachers voted to return to work Monday after a four-week strike that idled 168,000 students.

The school board and the union representing 10,500 teachers reached tentative agreement Saturday to end the strike that started the day before classes were to begin on Sept. 1.

The agreement would give teachers pay increases of up to 7% over two years and allow for a boost in decision-making authority at schools.

But the raises will probably be paid for by laying off up to 250 teachers and an undetermined number of administrators and non-teaching personnel, said school district spokesman Steve Wasko.

The 3% pay increase in the second year hinges on money collected from delinquent property taxes.

Last week, most teachers ignored a judge's back-to-work order. Civics teacher Brian McGraw said the hardest thing about his job would be telling his eighth-graders why he broke the law by ignoring the order.

Disabled Broadcaster Sues City for Handicap Access

PASADENA, Calif. (AP) —A disabled broadcaster sued Rose Bowl officials, claiming the stadium's new press box and suites are inaccessible to the handicapped.

The Rose Bowl, site of the 1993 Super Bowl and the 1994 World Cup soccer finals, recently underwent an $11 million renovation to enlarge its media facilities and add luxury suites. The new areas were completed in time for UCLA's Sept. 12 home-opener.

Three days later, Kirk Kilgour and a chapter of the California Association of the Physically Handicapped filed suit against the city of Pasadena, the Tournament of Roses Association and the architectural firm who did the renovations.

Kilgour is a free-lance broadcaster and former Olympic volleyball player who broke his neck in 1979 and uses a wheelchair. He has yet to cover a football game or other event at the Rose Bowl.

The lawsuit is one of the first and largest actions citing the new federal Americans with Disabilities Act. It seeks damages and structural modifications allowing full access, plaintiff attorneys Stanley Fleishman and Consuelo Woodhead said.

"Our primary concern is to see the law obeyed and to see that disabled people enjoy the same benefits as others," said Fleishman, a disabled attorney who filed the lawsuit.

Police Recover $4 Million in Thieved Taiwanese Art

SAN MATEO, Calif. (AP) —Police searching the home of a San Mateo man recovered $4 million in Chinese art he allegedly swindled from a Taiwanese woman, authorities said.

Friday's seizure of the paintings, scrolls and artifacts came two weeks after the man, Moses Wa Li, 53, was arrested by Taiwanese National Police on suspicion of fraud, the state attorney general's office said.

The cache of more than 200 objects included paintings from the 17th century Ming Dynasty, said Steven Sakata, a special agent with the attorney general's office.

Taiwanese authorities said Li convinced the daughter of Taiwanese brush painter Huang Chun-Pi to entrust him with the treasures following the death of her father last year.

Li, who had reportedly lived in the San Francisco Bay area for several years, allegedly told her he was the head of a San Francisco-Taiwan sister city organization and that he planned to build a gallery for the art works.

CalPIRG Pledge Plan Drafted

By Dan Lynch
Reporter

A popular environmental and consumer affairs advocacy group may once again be funded through a BARC statement fee if a compromise plan being studied by University of California officials is approved.

If all goes well for the California Public Interest Research Group, outgoing UC President David Gardner or incoming President Jack Peltason will approve a new pledge program designed to bring in student funds to help keep the group afloat.

Faye Park, UCSB's CalPIRG head, stressed the importance of a funding agreement to the group. "If we don't get an effective pledge system going soon, we may cease to exist," she said.

Gardner, who steps down Oct. 1, ordered an end to an earlier student funding program for the 16-year-old organization in 1990 because of what he deemed a controversial method of raising money on four UC campuses, including UCSB.

Recently, representatives from Gardner's office, along with CalPIRG's state-level professional lobbyist Mary Raftery, have hammered out an alternative funding mechanism for the organization. Their solution has become the core of a UC policy draft proposal that covers all similar student-run groups, and includes special language that addresses CalPIRG directly.

"If we don't get an effective pledge system going soon, we may cease to exist."

According to Park, the plan relies on voluntary donations from students on a pledge system. Once a student agreed to donate to the group, an automatic debit would appear on his or her BARC statement.

UC spokesman Mike Alva said the proposal would be "a voluntary fee collection system that would permit students to pledge for the remainder of their academic career."

According to Alva, negotiators passed the proposal to UC system senior administrators, and it was sent in early September to individual campus administrations for comment. The procedure for campus review is vague, but usually involves a dialogue between interested groups, Alva added.

Though UCSB Chancellor Barbara Uehling was unavailable to comment on plans for the draft's review, Park hopes that students are included during the process. "I would like to make sure that the administration is doing everything it can to get student input," Park said.

Once this step is completed, he said, the proposal will be reviewed by the Office of the President, and possibly altered depending on the comments that are returned before Gardner or, more likely, Peltason makes a decision.

Although Alva was unable to cite any timetable for completion of the draft review system, he said once the procedure is finished, the draft will be submitted to the president for his recommendation. Final approval will rest with the UC Regents, Alva said.

Without a permanent funding mechanism, CalPIRG currently relies largely upon its own canvassing to operate. According to Park, many of its activities have been suspended as a result of the reduced revenue level.

Under a previous system established in 1980, a $3 lock-in fee earmarked for CalPIRG was attached to every student's quarterly university billing statement. Students who did not wish to fund the group could petition the billing office to have the fee removed from their statement for that quarter or permanently.

Despite widespread student support, including a 75% positive vote at UCSB in 1990, Gardner struck down the old method — known as a waivable fee or negative checkoff system.

Water Board Kills RO Plan

By Rebecca Eggeman
Staff Writer

Amid controversy and threats of lawsuits, the Goleta Water Board voted to drop plans for one filtering system in a project designed to stretch Goleta's supply of drinking water.

The Goleta Water Board directors voted 3-1 at a special hearing Friday afternoon to reject all bids for construction of a reverse osmosis system meant to be included in the Goleta Sanitary District's water reclamation project. Without RO, potable water will be mixed with recycled waste water to bring it to a level safe for the irrigation of area fields and golf courses.

Controversy surfaced days after Blois Construction, Inc. won the RO contract in August when conflict of interest allegations arose because the contractors are sons of GWB Vice-President Jean Blois. R.P. Richards, a contractor who lost the bid to Blois, filed a complaint with the five-member board.

Blois Construction threatened to sue the Goleta Sanitation District, which is handling the reclamation project under the direction of the GWB, if the board moved to drop their contract and accept a higher bid.

According to Larry Mills, the board president, the GWB was in a no-win situation with the RO plan. "Based on what R.P. Richards and Blois Construction both said, it appears there could be a lawsuit if we proceed in one direction or the other," he said.

The GWB is in the second phase of building a reclamation facility that will provide local users with recycled water for areas of irrigation such as golf courses and playing fields. A pipeline system has already been laid out to UCSB, Ocean Meadows Golf Course and Sandpiper Golf Course.

Although the RO has been an integral part of the reclamation project since its launching over a year ago, members of the board questioned the need for the unit and its cost effectiveness at the hearing. "More and more, the RO unit appears to be a bad idea in retrospect. Do we need to increase the money that we're putting into this plant?" said board member David Bearman.

At the time the project was approved, Santa Barbara County was experiencing five years of drought conditions. Heavy rains this spring, however, brought an end to the crisis.

According to Bearman, the alternative of blending waste water with drinking water would save approximately $2.5 million. "Now we've decided to blend the waste water with potable water to lower the chloride level so it does not kill the grass," he said.

Director Kenneth Taylor, however, said using a potable water blend instead of reverse osmosis defeats the reclamation plant's purpose of freeing up drinking water. During the meeting, Taylor argued in favor of the RO unit and said the GWB will realize how necessary the RO system when it's too late. "We are really flirting with trouble," he said.

Bearman countered that drinking water will be freed up by the reclamation facility even without the RO because the users are currently watering their lawns solely with potable water.

The reclamation plant will be outfitted to incorporate an RO unit at a later time, if needed, Blois said.

Blois abstained from the vote, Taylor voted against rejecting the other bids, Mills, Bearman and Director John Singer supported the rejection. Taylor urged the directors to hold off on a decision to reject the RO until the conflict of interest issue was settled, arguing that a possible lawsuit would influence any decision the board made.

Fire-Breathing Acuña Lambastes UCSB

By Charles Hornberger
Staff Writer

Cal State Northridge Professor Rudy Acuña continued on Friday to hammer away at the university that denied him a job in Chicano studies, volleying criticisms and insults at UCSB faculty and administrators.

Flanked by his lawyer and framed from behind by a colorful religious mural, Acuña compared his reviewers at UCSB to communist-hunting Senator Joseph McCarthy during a press conference, and said that the university's hiring process "offends my sense of justice."

He also described Chancellor Barbara Uehling as pitiful in her management of the university and said he has served the public better than the faculty and administrators who recommended against hiring him last June.

"I think that if I never would have been born, I think that some people would've missed me, because I've helped some people out on the way up," he said. "But the people who sit on these reviewing committees haven't done anything. They haven't helped anybody, they wouldn't be missed. Even their wives would probably like to get rid of them."

Assistant Vice Chancellor for Public Affairs Ernest Lopez — one of the people that Acuña singled out Friday — said he was offended by the allegations.

"I'll tell you what I find most insulting about what Mr. Acuña has to say. He says publicly that he is 'too radical' to work at UCSB. I think that is offensive to many people at this university," Lopez said Sunday.

"He alleges that those of us who are already here who are not supporting him have sold out, and I find that particularly insulting," he said.

Acuña and his lawyer, Center for Constitutional Right attorney Sara Rios, also talked about the lawsuit they filed against the UC Regents, which asks the court to award Acuña the first full-time Chicano studies professorship at UCSB.

The suit, filed Friday in Alameda County, also asks for $1 million in compensatory and punitive damages, not $400,000 as was originally reported.

"We intend to litigate this case vigorously and enthusiastically. We plan to hold no punches," Rios said.

In the case, CCR lawyers will challenge the university's hiring practices and specifically its policy of confidentiality, which protects the identities of some individual reviewers and restricts some information.

"We will ask for the full reports and the names of the people. I expect that they will say that's confidential and refuse," Rios said, adding that there is some legal precedent for overturning confidentiality.

"I'm not saying it's a done deal, but there is a good basis to challenge it," she said.

All that the university has released to Acuña so far is an aggregate summary, which contains comments from several reviewers, in random order, but excludes their names. It does not give the university's final rationale for denying Acuña, although administrators have since said publicly that his scholarship was simply not good enough.

History Professor Jeffrey Russell, who headed the faculty Committee on Academic Personnel when Acuña's application was considered by that body, continued to defend the decision. Russell has also come under explicit attack from Acuña.

"The only thing I'll say is that all the procedures were followed exactly as fairly in his case as in every other case," Russell said. "One thing that (Acuña) ought to know is that there are laws and that people can be sued for things like slander."

UCSB Insurance Coordinator Scott Allan said that because the outcome of any legal challenges to the UC's hiring process will be of institutional interest, legal counsel from University of California headquarters will probably defend the decision in court.

Santa Barbara County administrators are breathing a collective sigh of relief now that the ink has finally dried on the adjustments the Board of Supervisors made to the budget last week.

No one anticipated big slashes during the third and final budget hearings on Thursday and Friday, and most people got what they expected. The county ran through the hearings like clockwork Thursday, making minor reductions that never hit harder than 5% to any county department, and in some cases recanted cuts made at earlier hearings.

When the final figures were tallied, the supervisors remained only $8,000 over their projected goal of giving back $100,000 to departments.

"It's been the least controversial budget hearings we have had," 5th District Supervisor Mike Stoker said. The board used a $2.5 million savings buffer that had accumulated all year to counteract $8 million the county lost in state funding.

Health Services felt the biggest hit in budget cuts with a 4.83% loss in funding from the county. The supervisors also cut 2.56% from Public Assistance and 3.35% from Resource Management during Thursday's hearings.

The biggest public opposition to county cuts came from library supporters who were against a $60,000 cut in county library funds. "I think there are two factors that drive our culture. One is literary, the other is money," said Fred Parker, a representative from the Santa Maria Library.

After hearing testimony from almost a dozen book-house backers, the board unanimously voted $60,000 back into the library budget. After the vote was cast, the supervisors displayed library supporter badges they had kept hidden during the motion.

In a similar effort to appease the public, the supervisors reconsidered a $14,000 budget cut in funding to advertise Santa Barbara area hotels and restaurants. A representative from a local hotel called for support of advertising funding to boost tourism in the area, convincing the board such subsidy was an investment in the county's tourism future.

The strongest plea for funding came from Jennifer Bigelow, a homeless advocate who appealed to the supervisors' sense of duty for the indigent population. "There's no fat in the budget ... it's crumbs, there's nothing left in the closet" of the Human Services Commission, she said. "People on the street are being impacted. Let's keep some money in there to keep the momentum going."

The supervisors consented to Bigelow's plea for help and allocated $18,000 back into the homeless program, which is not state mandated. The money will be spent searching for larger federal grants that will keep the program afloat.

The board's final motion for giving money back to departments went to Research and Development for $15,000 to continue work on a Montecito development project. 4th District Supervisor Diane Owens urged the board to continue on the project, rather than plugging funds into the project a year from now.

erroneously instructed that all lawful business ceases at the close of the business day, the instruction effectively directed a verdict against the defendants on an element of the offense."

Summing up the legalese, Adams said Loberg committed "a big no-no" with the instruction.

Loberg was out of town, and could not be reached for comment.

The affect of the decision on the other defendants is not yet clear. Most of them were fined around $160, pending the outcome of the trial.

If Loberg throws out all 180-odd cases, Adams speculated that those defendants who paid their fines will receive refunds. However, many of the defendants worked off their fines with public service, and would not be reimbursed, she said.

Legal fees for court-appointed lawyers — ranging into the thousands of dollars for some defendants — would not be returned either, she said.

Martin Boer, one of the 10 cleared on Thursday, is looking into a civil suit to recoup his $600 in legal costs. "I don't think it's appropriate for me to pay that fee," Boer said.

Adams, who has worked on the appeal for the last three months, said she has been honored to speak for the protesters.

"I will always be grateful that I have had the opportunity to represent these students," she said.

said Wallace, who is running for re-election.

Wallace, who lived in I.V. for almost two decades, stressed his connection to the area and the people who live in it. "I still consider I.V. my hometown," Wallace said, adding that the student vote is important to his campaign.

Although Wallace's opponent, rancher Willy Chamberlin, was not at the festival, volunteers from his campaign were at the festival to extend Cham-berlin's concerns for student issues. "Before they came to today's event, a lot of students didn't know about Wallace or Chamberlin's ideas," said Jamie Finegold, a Chamberlin campaign volunteer.

Unless students empower themselves through voting in the district they live in, they won't be heard by local government, added Wallace Aide Mark Chaconas. "We're trying to create a coalition to get people registered to vote," Chaconas said.

Other local candidates included Democratic congressional candidate Gloria Ochoa, and IVRPD candidates Bill Rytwinsky and Mike Boyd.

While the primary theme of the festival emphasized voter registration, entertainment played a large part. In addition to Los Guys, other bands who hit the stage included Mars Hotel, Tom Ball & Kenny Sultan, Love Masters and Word of Mouth.

As the festival came to an end, more people gathered around the candidates' booths. Many festival goers, already registered to vote, attended the festival to absorb information about the candidates, Rytwinsky said.

Foot Patrol Gets New Home

By Lisa Nicolaysen
Staff Writer

Instead of moving drunken Isla Vista residents and felons off the streets, hammer-wielding Foot Patrol officers will be moving office supplies to their new home across the road by the end of this week.

After more than 20 years of residence on the 900 block of Pardall Rd. next to Varsity Bikeshop, I.V. will see its laws enforced from an office on the other side of the street, at the former site of Computer Magic. As soon as modifications are completed this week at the new headquarters, the Foot Patrol will be moving into more spacious accommodations on Oct. 1, according to UCSB Police Lt. Tony Alvarez.

"We've had a need for increased space," he said. "We've outgrown the capacity to have effective work." In the old office, officers are so cramped that they are often forced to conduct interviews outside, Alvarez said.

The Santa Barbara County Sheriff's Department, the UCSB Campus Police Department and I.V. Foot Patrol are working together to make the move across the street, according to Earle Howey, UCSB Contracts and Property administrator. Rent for the Foot Patrol office is paid for by UCSB

"They're expanding to accommodate the personnel they have," Howey said. The lease on the current office is monthly, and Foot Patrol officers are hoping to vacate the premises by the end of the week.

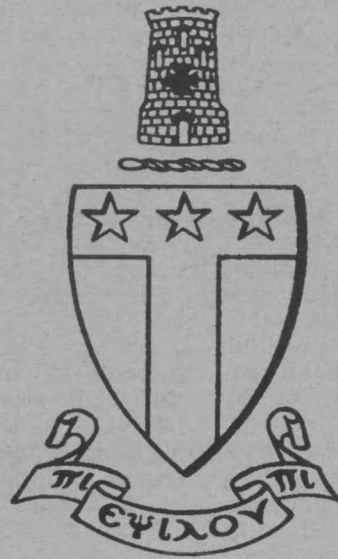

According to Foot Patrol Sgt. Sam Gross, the move will almost double the space available from 600 square feet to approximately 1,200 square feet. "There's no efficient way for 16 people to work at the old place," he said. "At least we'll have the freedom of room."

Work efforts to modify the new place by police officers are being led by Foot Patrol Lt. Ken Shemwell. "We've tried to minimize the cost of the move," Alvarez said. "We're doing a lot of hands on-work." Local prison inmates also contributed to the modifications to the new office in an effort to cut construction costs.

UCSB's Diversity Blues

This Year's Failure to Increase Minority Student Enrollment Points to Need for New Plan

Editorial

The education blues have been sung so often recently that people's ears are becoming inured to California's dire situation. But unless people start tuning in, each verse will only continue to get more and more pitiful. The most recent refrain is the ethnic breakdown of the UCSB freshman class this fall, as based on the Statements of Intention to Register received in mid-September. Although the actual number of minorities has risen, it is within one of the university's largest entering classes. Following a year that was widely held as shameful at the time, the percentage of incoming minority students has fallen from 30.9 to 30.6. In a school committed not only to accepting the top 12.5% of high school students, but also to reflecting the population of California, these new statistics are yet another indication of the University's failure.

The needs for ethnic diversity are many and, for the most part, agreed upon; their resolution is more elusive. Enterprises such as the Educational Opportunity Program and STEP have done much to make sure the term 'students of color' at UCSB means more than a bunch of deep tans or honey-gold hair. But, as the numbers show, the efforts of the campus as whole are a disgrace. The process of making UC's ethnic cross-section reflect that of the state's is a huge undertaking, but until the current trends change, it is evident that all students do not have an equal opportunity to educate themselves at the University.

One of the first and most basic steps UCSB should take is to send recruiters to Los Angeles Unified School District, California's largest and most heavily populated by students of color. It is an embarrassment that, unlike UC Davis, we do not have a permanent emissary there. Although piecemeal solutions like this will not solve the problem, every step in the right direction would help.

But tackling the lack of diversity at UCSB is only a fraction of what needs to be done throughout the state. Students from every ethnic and economic background must have the viable option to attend the University, and must be encouraged toward that goal. The vast majority of UC students were raised by parents and teachers without questioning if they would go to college, only which one. But a huge number of students in inner cities and low-income areas — and those who slipped through the cracks in upper- and middle-class high schools — do not grow up with such expectations.

"Recruitment" of some sort should begin as young as the first and second grades. Teachers at that level, particularly in minority-dense populations, should begin educating children on the possibilities of education itself. By the time a university recruiter talks to juniors in high school, those students or their teachers have generally determined whether or not they are college material.

Also, districts should offer incentives to teachers who work in the inner cities to remain there, rather than waving the carrot of a transfer out. If instructors don't like their classrooms, why should their students?

The bad news at UCSB today is the bitter fruit of a statewide education crisis in California. It is a crisis that must be tackled at all grades, in all neighborhoods, and at all levels of government. While UCSB can't be held totally responsible for its measly minority representation, any complicity in the state's larger educational malaise is damnable.

Playing both administrative and faculty roles at UCSB over the past 14-plus years has given me the relatively unique privilege of working from two wonderful vantage points. In the process of finding myself consciously, consistently — and spiratorially — returning to those general principles which underlie the pursuit of any education, I have found that my educational thinkers who have gone before me have accounted the differential effects that living has on individuals. I have found that my students is essentially the same ... and I am the same.

In these days of increasingly absurd personal competitiveness, negative ethics, and parity between those who accomplish and those who are structurally barred from it, students must realize that one's education is not only for the sake of making a living, but that it is for the sake of and for living and for life itself. At its best, education — as distinguished from mere schooling — prepares students for professions and careers. It is you with the will, the integrity and the expanded knowledge and understanding.

A Strange Evening

Alex Salkever

So there we were, hanging out on the balcony of our palatial Isla Vista apartment. It was Thursday night, the weekend had started officially on Wednesday and everyone was relaxed. A case of cheap beer in the fridge, a motley assortment of bad furniture cradling a motley assortment of bad people who are, more or less, my friends.

I have been hanging out a lot, while I sit here and await with unbearable anticipation my departure date. It is very easy to sit in I.V. and just do nothing — shoot the shit and suck back beers, with no worries at all except for the occasional argument over politics (rare) or sports. It's especially easy when you have a big balcony and friends who drop by often.

That's what Kip did Thursday night, cracking our monotonous buzz and throwing things off the balcony. Well, actually, Kip only poured some beer over the side and threw a couple of books into the street, injuring no one. He broke a chair, a bowl and a steamer trunk. He just barely missed me with a glass projectile.

I do not know Kip well enough to feel comfortable describing him. Adjectives like insane, brilliant and asshole arise in conversations about him. A wide variance, but one thing became clear to me that night — Kip can really shake you up.

Granted, most of the time he ran around the balcony chasing another terrified friend in circles and tossing cups of water on people. But words were coming out of his mouth at sporadic intervals. Something about playing the game. "So you want to play," Kip leered at me.

"Play what?" I asked, avoiding his insistent gaze.

"Do you have the equipment?" he continued, lashing at me with a long stemmed rose picked up somewhere along the road to debauchery. It had long become apparent that Kip was stinking drunk.

"Equipment? What the hell are you talking about?"

"If you want to play, you have got to acquire the equipment. Then come and talk to me."

"Kip, I really don't know what the hell you are talking about."

"Ah, but you do, you do know exactly what I am talking about, and if you don't know, then you shouldn't even be thinking about what I'm talking about. You have got to know, and then

At its proper depth, true educa- ere schooling — must not only is and careers, it must provide and the conviction to put your rstanding to increasingly more positive social and human uses.

Sincere students who are intellectually and morally awake must surely realize by now that all the technological and scientific breakthroughs we have experienced in recent decades has done relatively little to advance human understanding, human compassion and human relations. Acknowledging the illnesses of this society and our tremendous capacity to do much, much better, our objectives in education must be seen in the context of the total life. It is inner happiness and outer harmony which we all ultimately seek, yet different temperaments and values in different people drive each to seek such contentment in a variety of ways. Real freedom, in general, is predicated upon the belief that each of us has an inalienable right to exercise our personal choice — within unoffending limits — to pursue happiness along whichever path draws us. Yet none of those paths should be without a heart, or without an eye on the human effects of what we select to do.

Again and again, I urge students to seek a positive balance between the expansion of the head and the expansion of the heart. I use different language and approach my efforts to effect deeper understanding AND inspiration from various levels — depending on the interest, temperament and readiness of the student. As an administrator, I encourage proper planning, self-organization, self-control, consistency and realism. Yet, as a teacher, I encourage broad and accurate scholarship, an understanding of the inherent interconnectedness among all knowledge and the intrinsic value of service to those in need.

Students! We must all (administrators, faculty and staff members too) learn to distinguish the central from the peripheral, to think deeply and to govern our human interactions by some set of universally acceptable principles. I encourage you to be rigorously engaged in the task for which you have come to this institution of higher learning in the first place. Learn — and then reflect on the social value of that learning. Only then may you assume your rightful place as a balanced force of positive regard and contribution within the circles through which you will move and across the variety of territories which you must traverse. If you leave on this journey NOW and drive at a speed and in a manner which is appropriate for your vehicle, we all stand a much better chance of arriving safely. All the best to all of us.

ening With the Holy Fool

once you know, you must do."

And then he was off, prancing about in sheer lubricated bliss. I stood there dumbfounded for a little bit, and then I began to understand what he was talking about. He was right, of course.

In ancient Greek dramas, the characters would often go to an oracle in search of the answer to their troubles. Invariably, the reply from the oracle was unexpected and cryptic, if not completely incomprehensible. In the Russian Orthodox religion, insanity was a sign of divinity, and lunatics, or "holy fools" were, and still are, respected as those who sometimes speak the divine word. What came out of the mouth of a holy fool, however, was often sheer gibberish.

In our day and age, polluted by the information age, we want to know everything exactly. We want facts, figures and solutions to our problems served up in palatable little sound bytes. I believe that humans have always been this way — looking for shortcuts — but now with the onset of cable television and Nintendo, the tendency towards the lowest common denominator has found its means.

There are no more holy fools, you see, no oracles. Sure, we have our horoscopes and our psychics in the National Enquirer, but the concept of a holy fool is not like either of these. A holy fool rarely provides concrete suggestions, but he or she does shake up your perceptions a little bit, allowing your mind to escape the shackles of conventional thinking placed there long ago by environment and genetics.

Listening to the advice of even the mildly insane has become positively unfashionable. Governor Jerry Brown acquired his infamous nickname, Moonbeam, for his strange ideas and some random mumblings about satellites for state communications. Now he is estranged for the same ideas which led him to spend time in a Buddhist monastery searching for enlightenment, and his idea of satellite communication for state governments is the norm.

Yes, Kip broke a couple of things and scared some people. He shook me up pretty good, too. But not by throwing a bottle at me. Rather, Kip forced me to think about my plans and problems in a different light. Telling you the actual contents of the conversation would be pointless.

But everyone has a demon in their head and everyone will meet their holy fool. You have just got to figure out who he or she is and then listen carefully.

The Reader's Voice

Off the Horse

Editor, Daily Nexus:

This letter is in response to the letter written by Meredith Munger (Daily Nexus, Reader's Voice, Sept. 25). Miss Munger,

You have lived in this town for three years and feel you own it. Yes, I agree that one should not be harassed by the homeless as you stated, but that is not the case in Isla Vista as you would like to believe.

You have no right to call the people in the park parasites and assume they are mentally ill. They're probably more sane and aware of the real world than you. You are fortunate enough to have a home to live in and food to eat. I'm sure you haven't even tried to get to know those people in the park, except for maybe the famous Leprechaun.

The stories these people can tell you. ... A couple are college graduates, some went to Vietnam and almost all have some unique and interesting things to say. Unfortunately, people like you judge them on their outer appearance; you never realize that these people have soul and human compassion. You say they mooch off people, but they give to this community more than you know. Some clean and work on beautifying Isla Vista, and if you are ever feeling down, there is always someone in the park who will cheer you up. But you wouldn't know that. All you see is what you want to see.

On the whole, they don't mooch; and if some do, it is not as though they are harming the environment or making it unsafe, as you indicated. I feel safer with the homeless in the park than with some drunk fraternity boy who thinks he has a right to do anything, simply because he has money and status.

You also spoke of your shock upon returning to Isla Vista's clutter after spending the summer in a clean hometown. Well, I.V. is also a hometown to many, and when I spent the summer here it was very clean. The mess and the littering which you blame on the homeless only started when the students came back. Cafe Roma and Subway were clean during the summer months because everyone was considerate and threw away their own garbage. Now that all the students have returned, it is a mess because they expect the workers to clean up after them.

Isla Vista is not a campground for bums, and if you think it is, then I suggest you move elsewhere. These people were living here years before you. What do you suggest? Get rid of them to make your life more comfortable?

Not everyone in this world was raised with a proper home and family; those who weren't don't deserve to be judged and looked down upon just because they were less fortunate. Smarten up and get off your high horse.

MOVE

ciently in the expanded space, where three small offices, two interviewing rooms and one supervisor's office are being built, according to Alvarez. Locker areas for both men and women will be a refreshing change for Foot Patrol officers, who were forced to share accommodations at the old place.

"With this new place,
we were able to accomplish these things," Alvarez added. "We will be able to provide an appropriate work environment to be able to serve the community much better."

DECLINE

Bouckaert, an executive board member of 100
Black Men.

"The administration just isn't aggressive in recruiting people of color. If they really cared, they would have asked politically active student groups to help out. There are solutions, but they don't want them," the senior Black studies major said.

Claudia Monterrosa, a fourth-year political science and Latin-American studies major, agrees.

"There are no efforts to keep minorities on this campus," Monterrosa said. "They keep on raising the fees, and that results in less money for financial aid recipients. The people it hits the hardest are the minorities from low-income families."

Bouckaert suggested that the administration make UCSB more attractive to people of color by increasing the number of minority faculty members, informing students in the inner cities of financial aid opportunities and establishing a permanent recruiter in Los Angeles.

According to Gene Awakuni, assistant vice chancellor of Student Academic Affairs Services, the UC Office of the President organized two task forces over the past six years, one dealing with Black student eligibility for UC, and one concentrating on Latinos/Chicanos.

"We need to work in collaboration with teachers and school districts to help students in inner cities be prepared for college and let them know there are options out there for them," Awakuni said.
"The University just needs to go back into the schools, and frankly, in the past it hasn't."

Awakuni explained that the task forces are underway to increase the number of minority students eligible for the UC system by setting up new outreach programs to let high school students know what classes are necessary for acceptance into the University.

Awakuni cited the small number of minority students eligible for the UC as a major obstacle to diversity. "The real work needs to take place at fundamental levels," he said. "Making this place a good place for minorities is very strong on our agenda."
